HayMarketReport

(DOMINION SEED BRANCH)

The domestic market is reported generally active and the export demand overseas exceptionally good.

During August to October inclusive, 1929, some 49,892 tons were exported from Eastern Ontario and Quebec sources, mainly to the British Isles, as against 12,196 tons for the same period last year.

The light shipment of wheat to Europe this autumn permitted ample shipping space for hay from the ports of Montreal and Quebec, and the hay trade has taken advantage of this before the close of navigation.

The export demand in the Eastern States, at present slow, is expected to increase as usual during the winter months. Hay exports to Newfoundland, Bermuda and the West Indies are commencing from the Maritime Provinces, and are expected to increase during the next few weeks.

A large supply of No. 2 dyke and timothy hay is reported from the growing district at the head of the Bay of Fundy in New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. Supplies of marketable hay in Quebec are reported from the following districts—Berthier and Maskinonge, Bagot, Vercheres and Richelieu, LaPrairie and Naperville, Chateauguay, St. John-Iberville, Vaudreuil, St. Guillaume and Champlain.

It is estimated that about 65 per cent of the marketable hay in Quebec is already sold. The supply in Eastern Ontario (in Prescott, Russell and Carleton main production counties) is reported much depleted also, due to exports overseas and shipments to lumber and mining interests of the north.

Shipments to these same interests are reported from the New Lakeard and Englehart district of Northern Ontario. Large quantities of hay from Dryden during October, and further large shipments are expected there from the east this month.

The hay crop in Southwestern Ontario was relatively light this year. Nevertheless, current supplies for the trade at Toronto are being received from Blythe, Wingham, Caledonia and Streetsville district. Some authorities believe that the demand in Western Ontario during the next few months will permit smaller than usual exports from that district. This may prove correct as there were light crops of ensilage corn and other forage also, so that more hay than usual may be needed for feeding purposes.

A shortage of feed roughage is reported from Southern Manitoba and Saskatchewan, which will account for the larger than usual shipments of hay already made from the east and Alberta to points in these provinces. Large quantities of prairie wool and slough hay were saved in Northern Saskatchewan, which will supplement the supply as winter advances.

Reports from Alberta indicate that there was a fair crop of hay this year, the domestic markets of Calgary and Edmonton receiving supplies of timothy from the Pincher Creek district, prairie and No. 2 mixed from Olds, red top and blue joint from Stake Lake and alfalfa from Brooks. Seasonal shipments of Pinchee, Creek timothy to the lumber camps and mines of Alberta and British Columbia are reported.

The hay market in Vancouver is reported quite, with supplies being received from the Fraser Valley.

Owing to the greater export demand and scarcity of roughage in large areas of Ontario, Saskatchewan and Manitoba hay prices are higher than last year in these provinces and are

Superstitions Are Ridiculed

(British United Press)

LONDON, Nov. 29.—Those who avoid walking under ladders, the number 13, first seeing a new moon through glass and so forth, will cross their fingers at the views of Sir Robert Armstrong-Jones, eminent surgeon.

Sir Robert scoured all superstitions in a recent speech, declaring that the "existence of such a thing" was hard to account for in an educated people. Psychologically, he said it was based on fear, and in most cases was contrary to experience and belief. So that although one who has flouted the ladder superstition may have received the contents of a paint pot on the head, many thousand of others have escaped.

He pointed out that while there are many who say the old superstitions are losing their grip on peoples minds, others still shudder at the thought of violating them. When Lord Balfour, then A. J. Balfour, First Lord of the Admiralty, referred in 1915 to the losses of the British Navy, he touched the wood of the Treasury Bench "for luck."

ert is a relic of pagan times when people making an assertion used to place their hands on a tree where the gods were supposed to reside in case some offended deity should send them bad luck.

One superstition, which is strong today, especially among ex-service men, concerns the lighting of three cigarettes from a match—but few are aware of the origin of this superstition. It was in the Boer war, when snipers, seeing a lighted match in a line, would fire at the flame as it passed from soldier to soldier. Usually the third or last man was shot.

FAMOUS ACE RETIRED

(Canadian Press)

LONDON, Nov. 30.—One of the most famous aces of the naval air service in the war was Air Commodore Charles Rummy Samson, C. M. G., D. S. O., who has just been placed on the retired list on account of ill health.

He came to be known as the "Captain Kettle of the Air Forces" because of his redpointed beard. In naval air flying he was one of the most former pioneers. He carried out the first seaplane experiments, the first cross-country night flights and the first ascent from the deck has been recorded that so great was the impression created by his prowess as an air fighter during the war that the enemy offered a reward of $3,000 for his capture.

One of his notable performances since the war was the leading of the R. A. F. flight from Cairo to the Cape in 1927.

THREE HUSBANDS DIE IN MINE

When Andrew McDonald, 30, was killed recently by a runaway car in a coal mine at Ayrshire, Scotland, it marked the passing of the third husband of Mrs. McDonald to lose his life suddenly in the same mine. The mine had been free from accidents for more than six years previous to McDonald's death. The father of the woman's second husband was killed in another mine.

To educate as well as amuse an electric train has been invented that a boy can take apart and reassemble without tools.
