

From School Teacher To Great Eminence

A young man who was brought up on a farm in Western Pennsylvania studied diligently and qualified for district school teacher. Further pursuing his studies and teaching, he managed to save up enough money to put him thru medical college. After the Civil War, he began the practice of medicine in the new oil section of Pa., and often rode horse-back thru the woods to reach and relieve those who were seriously ill. He was a student of nature, knew and could easily recognize most of the medicinal plants growing in the woods. Later, he moved to Buffalo, N. Y., where he launched his favorite remedies, and, a short time, they were sold by every drug-store in the land. Today, the name of this man, Dr. R. V. Pierce, is known throughout the world. His Golden Medical Discovery is the best known blood medicine and tonic. More than fifty million bottles have been sold. If your druggist does not sell the "Discovery," in liquid or tablets, you can obtain a trial pkg. of the tablets by sending 10c to Dr. Pierce's Branch Laboratory in Bridgeburg, Ont.

The Red Lamp

July 29th. Today has been quiet. Those constant reminders of the latest tragedy, the boats dragging the bay, have disappeared, and once more we see gay little picnic parties, chugging across the water to Robinson's Point or thereabouts, laden with hampers and, I dare say, with flasks.

Edith came down to luncheon in her best pink frock, with a hat to match, and made shameless eyes at me during that meal. The cause of this sudden attention developed later when she took the car—

BABY'S OWN SOAP

From Baby's birth

Best and it's worth quoted Virgilia Spiritus Inter afit with a certain unctio.

"Soul animating matter!" he said. "It is a great thought, Mr. Porter. And I have reached that time in life when what is to come is assuming more importance than that which has gone."

Then he dismissed the subject, and went back again to the local situation, this time taking up the crimes themselves. He sees no necessary connection between the disappearance of Maggie Morrison and the tragedy of Carroway, and on this I did not enlighten him. On his saying, however, that in my place he would not feel safe in keeping Jane and Edith here, I told him at some length of my own involvement, and this brought about a discussion of Greenough and his methods.

John Smith and His Car

By FREDERICK C. RUSSELL

John Smith is a character whom every motorist should welcome. He is not selfish, rather he is a motoring martyr, a chap willing and glad to have exploited, in an interesting way, his experiences for the benefit of the other twenty million or more members of the motor clan.

KNACK IN PARKING

About a week after returning from a trip I had occasion to drive downtown with Smith in his car. Naturally my attention was directed to his driving, now that he had become pretty well initiated into the great and growing clan of brother motorists.

There was improvements, though it was to be expected that he would not reveal any fine touches of the art of driving. He still drove with the gas lever on the steering wheel too far up, which made his engine rattle when he shifted gears. He still kept his foot poised on the clutch pedal, a habit that has ruined more clutches than one. And among other bad habits which a more experienced driver would be likely to discern, he still sounded his horn too far away from the street crossings.

But where Smith actually failed, however, was in his effort to find a parking space for the car and his inability to avail himself of the opportunity when he found one. I think we went around the block three times before he found anything worth considering.

"Why don't you pull in here?" I asked. "Why don't you ask me to drive the car up a tree?" he growled. "It would be just as impossible."

I pointed to another small space just ahead. "If that's your idea of a good place," he retorted, "then I'll show you where you're wrong."

He nosed the car in toward the curb, and, stopping barely a foot from the car ahead, declared: "Now, hope you're satisfied. The back of the car is five feet from the street. And if I try to do better I'll be here for the rest of the day."

That remained to be seen. "Why don't you try backing in?" I asked. "You never see a chauffeur trying to park his car head first."

"That's all right for chauffeurs," he admitted. "But the average driver can't do it without blocking up the whole street."

Just to prove that he was dead wrong I offered to take the wheel and show him how it could be done. As I suspected, he was only too glad to let me.

Starting at the very beginning of the job I drove up alongside of the car just in front of the space. My intention to the drivers behind me to pass to my left, I stopped and shifted immediately into "reverse," in passing the opening at such close range it was easy to judge whether the space was large enough to accommodate the car. A space five feet longer than the wheelbase of the car, I figured, would be ample room.

In backing I commenced cutting the front wheels just as soon as my right rear wheel was safely past the other car's left rear fender. I then cut straight in toward the curb until my line with the left front fender of the car behind. At this point I immediately cut the front wheels in the exact opposite direction, continuing to back at the same time. Here, however, I proceeded very slowly, keeping my eyes on the left rear fender of the car ahead to make sure that I did not come too close to it. By lessening the cut in the wheels it would have been possible to avoid hitting it had I found that I was coming too close. After backing to within a foot of the car behind I straightened up the wheels and drove ahead to a point equidistant between the two cars. Smith's car was then parallel with the curb and not more than a few inches from it. He was amazed at the simplicity of the job.

"That takes practice," he argued. "Of course it does," I replied. "But you've been trying to park in tight places without even trying to learn if you intend keeping up with the increased city congestion."

"And don't forget," I reminded him, as he was about to rush away from the car on an errand, "always stop a minute to make sure there are no 'No Parking' signs near the place."

Following the ceremony in the church, a reception was held at the home of the bride's parents. Gifts were a string of ivory beads to Miss Agnes Sherron, and a bar pin to Miss Lucilla Sherron; gold cuff links to the groomsmen, and a bar pin to the organist.

The good wishes of a host of friends go with these two happy young couples to their respective homes.

ADDRESS AND PRESENTATION

The friends and neighbors of Mr. Henry J. McDonald assembled at his home Friday evening, Sept. 10, to pass the evening with him before his departure from their midst to further his studies in St. Augustin's Seminary, Toronto. Dancing was the entertainment of the evening. About midnight his boy friends assembled around the supper table and there an address was read to him by Mr. John A. Steele, and a well-filled purse, the generous gift of the good people of Little Pond and outlying districts, was presented to him. Mr. Roy Grant, on behalf of his St. Dunstan's friends, spoke a few words in admiration of his fellow student, and then applied in fitting terms, thanking the people for their present kindness and generosity, and also for their past hospitality to him while home on vacation.

The following is the address:— To Mr. Henry J. McDonald, Little Pond.— Dear Henry,—On this, the eve of your departure for Toronto, where your studies are to be still further prosecuted, your childhood friends and neighbors from childhood have assembled here this evening to bid you farewell and at the same time to express in a meagre manner our appreciation of your life-work amongst us. During your early boyhood years you have always taken an active interest in all that pertained to the welfare of our parish community and social life, and by your intangible example of excellence and strict adherence to those noble principles which characterized and a true manhood engendered in the hearts of all your friends feeling of truly involuntary admiration. But, as years passed the attractiveness of your community life in which you played a prominent part began to dim and a first for knowledge and in the autumn of 1919 entered St. Dunstan's University, where by your amiable disposition and high moral character, you earned the esteem of both faculty and students. Not to be forgotten for there it was that your intellectual genius became apparent which you pursued your studies with such industry when we consider that though engaged in professional activities often belatedly, you stood each year high in your various classes and after six years of diligent application to the study you passed from the hallowed walls of your Alma Mater, well fitted to take your place in the world.

SICK ABED EIGHT MONTHS

After Taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Could Do All Her Work and Gained in Weight

Melfort, Saskatchewan.—"I had inward troubles, headaches and severe pains in my back and sides. I was so sick generally that I could not sit up and I was in bed most of the time for eight months. An aunt came to visit and help me as I was unable to attend to my baby and could not do my work. She told me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and after taking two bottles I could get up and dress myself. I also took Lydia E. Pinkham's Blood Medicine. When I first took the medicine I only weighed seventy-eight pounds. Now I weigh twice as much. If I get out of sorts or weary I can't sleep I always take another bottle of the Vegetable Compound. I find it wonderfully good for female troubles, and have recommended it to my neighbors. I will be only too glad to answer any letters I receive asking about it. Mrs. WILLIAM RITCHIE, Box 488, Melfort, Saskatchewan.
