Dorothy Norman Publishes Books Of Significance

By W. G. ROGERS

NEW YORK, Sept. 24 —(AP)— Authors don't always expect to make money, but publishers usually are in business for love of lucre as well as literature. Yet I've just met a different kind of publisher who says:

"I've never made any money publishing books, and never even tried to."

She is Dorothy Norman, an attractive woman who claims to be a lot older than she looks. She has two children, a husband and a house; has written several books; is active in political affairs; makes speeches; does a thrice-a-week column for the New York Post; works a camera. And as the Twice-a-Year Press, now 10 years old, she has published 15 books.

Ten are successive numbers of "Twice a Year; A Book of Literature, the Arts and Civil Liberties." The new number, called "Art and Action," will be out soon. For it, as well as all the others, Mrs. Norman read hundreds of manuscripts submitted during the year. She decided on the ones to print, edited them, designed the book itself, and even sent the word around to book stores, for she hasn't any salesman. One year she even took care of wrapping the volumes and mailing them.

Famous Europeans

It's a one-woman but many-author house. "Art and Action," as well as the preceding numbers, is not like any other collection in book form. Besides an impressive group of young writers, there is a remarkable European contingent: Camus, Sartre, Malraux, Brecht, Silone; and along with them are political, legal and sociological documents of first importance, such as speeches by George C. Marshall, United States secretary of state; a proposed world constitution; and reports of hearings held by the House of Representatives Un-American Affairs Committee. There are photographs by Strand, Brett Weston and Mrs. Norman.

"To understand is not enough," the editor says. When she first came to New York from Philadelphia, she worked for the Civil Liberties Union. Acquaintance with modern art taught her, she says, that organizational defence of individuals was not individualistic enough. Art got closer to a man; literature was written not only by the professional literary man but also by the doctor, lawyer, judge and statesman.

Her convictions were confirmed by Alfred Stieglitz, art dealer photographer and sympathetic and helpful friend of the new artist. Stieglitz was the subject of an anthology of appreciations edited by Mrs. Norman and of a memorial portfolio issued a year after his death. Mrs. Norman now is at work on his biography, which she plans as a definite source book running to two or three volumes.

Other publications of Twice a Year are books by Angna Enters and John Beecher, and a Franz Kafka "Miscellany."

Mrs. Norman says the new volume ought to sell for $8 for her to make a two-per-cent profit; the loss she'll sustain, at $4.75 a number, comes out of her newspaper work. Her associate editors are Mary Lescaze and Richard Wright.

LIVING CONDITIONS IN U. K. IMPROVING

MONCTON — "There is a decided improvement in living conditions in Britain," Lady M. V. Bowater, of London, England, told reporters on her arrival by Trans-Canada Air Lines here recently. "More and more articles which were absent since early in the war are returning to store shelves. We are still a long way from being able to shop like Canadians though. It's a treat to visit your stores and to see the grand selection and no coupons to bother with." Lady Bowater had accompanied her husband to Corner Brook, Nfld., to look over the Bowater's Newfoundland Pulp and Paper Company property there.
