Lobstermen Approve Gov't Marketing Plan

MONCTON, N. B., Nov. 5 —(CP)—The Dominion Government plan of marketing canned lobsters was approved in principle when representatives of the industry in the Maritime Provinces conferred here today with Department of Fisheries officials. Continuation of the plan next year was recommended.

The meeting also recommended compulsory inspection of all canned lobsters and it was believed this would be made effective next year All lobsters sold under the Dominion scheme have been strictly inspected but there has never been compulsory inspection of the industry's entire output.

Dr. D. B. Finn, deputy minister of fisheries, reviewed the government's action to protect lobster fishermen against markets lost as a result of the war. Last spring Dr. Finn was authorized to purchase 55,000 cases to supply new markets in Canada and the United States. These lobsters had to be up to certain standards and were stored in special warehouses.

Representatives of the fishermen and packers were reported heartily in favor of the plan today. Only a few minor differences of opinion were reported at the meeting, such as a belief that grading was somewhat stringent.

The inspection system was explained by Dr. Ernest Hess, of the fisheries research board. George Atkins, Toronto, dealt with the advertising and sales campaign undertaken by the government.

W. S. Lee, Halifax, reported on warehousing and supervision of the shipping. Others at the meeting included Major D. H. Sutherland, assistant deputy minister of fisheries; H F. S. Paisley, Ottawa, director of publicity for the fisheries department; Col. A. L. Barry, chief supervisor of fisheries, Halifax; D. D. Fraser, district superintendent, Pictou, N. S.; and Bert McInerney, Halifax, secretary of the United Maritime Fishermen's Association.

Defence Counsel J. W. Maddin, K.C., advanced a suggestion Smith had been insane at the time of the shooting, in his address to the jury. Mr. Justice Hall said no evidence had been produced in this connection.

The confession, admitted after a "trial within a trial" with the jury excluded, quoted Smith as saying he shot MacIsaac when the farmer entered his home as the boys waited to rob him.

"I stood behind the door in the porch with an axe, intending to hit him," Smith quoted. "He came in and he saw me, and we began to struggle. He found the revolver in my belt, and we started to fight over it. I got it and fired. He grabbed me again, and I pulled the trigger again. He stiffened . . ."

Smith explained they had found the revolver in the victim's home as they searched it. They took nothing else, but a few flashlight batteries and a notebook, which they jettisoned in the nearby woods as they fled home in panic after the shooting.

HOUSE

G. R. Bouchard (Con. Carleton) and A. H. Bence (Con. Saskatoon City).

The rigid formality which governs the Commoner's visit to the Senate was broken accidentally when Speaker J. A. Glen, Dr. Arthur Beauchesne, clerk of the House, their attendants and members left the Chamber before proceedings were ended.

Headed by House officials the Commoners gathered behind the bar at the foot of the Chamber to hear the throne speech.

When Sir Lyman had concluded his reading, but before the copy could be delivered to Speaker Glen in keeping with tradition, the latter and his followers turned and left the Chamber.

They were hastily summoned to return, Speaker Glen received his copy, and Senate Speaker Parent formally announced that Parliament had prorogued. Members grinned broadly when they reached the corridor and dispersed.

Tomorrow political fireworks will be in the making when House members of all three Opposition parties meet in caucus to chart their sessional course.

Conservative Leader Hanson, who offered considerable criticism of the government's war effort during a speaking tour he made a month ago will confer with his party colleagues at a meeting expected to last all day.

Members of the Co-operative Commonwealth Federation will decide on a House leader for the new session. It is a foregone conclusion that M. J. Coldwell (C.C.F. Rosetown-Biggar) will be asked to continue as House leader in the absence of J. S. Woodsworth, veteran C.C.F. head, who has been ill since last spring.

New Democracy members also will meet in caucus.

itza, are shelling the roads and the vicinity of the city, an Italian concentration point.

(Border dispatches reaching Belgrade, Yugoslavia, said the Greeks had cut communications between the main Italian army and 30,000 Italians in the Koritza area.)

2. The Macedonian front is "quite satisfactory."

3. In the central sector, the Greek air force heavily attacked Italian columns while ground forces captured a number of prisoners and a quantity of war equipment.

4. Greek forces are holding their positions on the southern sector, just north of the Kalamas River, near the Ionian coast.

Meanwhile, there was increasing evidence that Britain is giving active aid. British fighter planes were said to have shot down an Italian bomber over central Greece.

In addition, seven other Italian planes caught on the ground at the Koritza airdrome were destroyed by Greek planes and two others of the Italian squadrons which raided Piraeus, the port of Athens, were reported shot down.

Athens, itself, had its longest air aid alarm of the war — an hour and 15 minutes.

The Italians dropped a number of bombs in an unsuccessful attack on Piraeus, and the towns of Phaleron and Ellinoco in the Athens area.

CHURCHILL

not refuel at the ports of neutral Eire and said this "is a most heavy and grievous burden."

In other categories, the Prime Minister:—

1. Pledged "we shall do our best" to help Italian-invaded Greece from naval and air bases established on the island of Crete and promised "ever-growing" British bombings of southern Italy, but he refused to "raise false hopes" or tip off the Axis on specific measures of aid.

2. Declared the Vichy Government of France had "unhappily" decided to collaborate with Hitler and "we are therefore left alone" in aiding the Greeks, although France likewise was pledged to help them.

3. Disclosed civilian air raid dead in Britain total 14,000, wounded 20,000; said bombers had done little damage to aircraft or arms factories; estimated the Royal Air Force is destroying three German planes to one British, and that the Germans are losing from six to 10 pilots for every British airman killed.

4. Predicted British air power would protect and sea power transport big British offensive forces "in 1943 and 1944; declared Britain must have an army superior to the Axis in quality and equipment and declared 1,700,000 men will be in uniform in Britain's home guard by the end of the year.

5. Said British vigilance had converted the invasion danger into an "invasion scare."

Recalls Threats

Mr. Churchill began by recalling that Hitler had threatened to wipe out Britain's cities on Sept. 4. He launched his mass air attacks thereafter, but the cities are still standing. "They are quite distinctive objects on the landscape and our people are going about their tasks with the utmost activity," Mr. Churchill bitingly observed.

He pointed out that 300 soldiers have been killed and 500 wounded as against 14,000 civilians killed and 20,000 wounded and ended his statistical survey with the pointed remark: 'So much for the attack on military objectives."

Transport had been the greatest difficulty faced by those dealing with air raid problems, but the Prime Minister said "we are getting a good trip on that."—

"In these vicissitudes the bearing of our people not only in London, but in Birmingham, Liverpool, Manchester and other places have gained the unstinted admiration of classes throughout the British Empire and the United States and, so far as they have been allowed to hear of it, the people of captive countries," he declared.

He referred to the dwindling of air attacks in recent times and hinted that perhaps some means had been found of dealing with them. The weather played its part he admitted, "but there are other things going on which play their part besides the weather and which I believe will play a greater part as the months pass by. The House will not wish me to go into technical details of these points."

"Surveying the whole scene alike, in its splendor and its devastation, I see no reason to regret that Herr Hitler tried to break the British spirit by the blind bombing of our cities and countryside," the Prime Minister said, after alluding to the fact that Britain has advanced "on the road to our reaching. . .parity in the air."

He went on:—

"More serious than the air-raiding has been the recent recrudescense of U-boat sinking in the Atlantic approaches to our island.

"The fact that we cannot use the south and west coasts of Ireland to refuel our flotillas and aircraft and thus protect trade by which Ireland, as well as Great Britain lives, that fact is a most heavy and grievous burden and one which should never have been placed upon our shoulders, broad though they may be."

He said Britain had been during the last month at the lowest point of her flotilla strength, but the 50 American destroyers were rapidly coming into service and the main flow of construction began when war broke out is now "coming along."

In spite of serious losses," he said, "we have still very nearly as much shipping tonnage as we had at the outbreak of the war," in addition to the shipping of allies which has come under the British Government's control.

He said the Admiralty and Ministry of Shipping were making intense efforts to meet the U-boat threats and expressed confidence that "they will be able to cope with them and be able to bring in all vital supplies of food and ammunition which we shall require."

Expect Heavier Attacks

He added that still heavier U-boat attacks must be expected "and we are making immense preparations of all kinds to meet them."

Mr. Churchill added:—

"We have had to look a long way ahead in this sphere of war. We have had to think of the years 1943 and 1944 and of the tonnage we shall be able to move and have to move across the seas then."

Danger of invasion has diminished, he said. Furthermore Britain with its well-trained army, its home guard, and its preparedness against such tactics as enabled the Nazis to seize the Netherlands, is much less vulnerable now than last spring.

But he said "do not let us make the mistake of assuming it (the danger of invasion) has passed away or it may not recur in acuter form."

He criticized those who turned possibility of invasion into "invasion scare" and said that Britain's strong preparations to meet invasion probably resulted in "scare". He pleaded with the British public to understand that the huge numbers of men under arms did not mean they could be used for air raid precautions work when they must be sharpened for offensive.

Since Britain's armies are not as strong numerically as the enemy's, they must make up for the difference in quality and in the superiority of their arms.

"This is a lengthy process," the Prime Minister said, "but we must persevere and not allow ourselves to be drawn from the task by passing distractions and temptations."

Turning to the Near East he said Britain had a tremendous handicap to overcome since submission of the French Government to Germany deprived Britain of air and naval bases, and Gen. Weygand's great army upon which it had counted.

Mediterranean Fleet Ready

There have been no serious collisions with the Italian forces, he said, but we have every reason to be content with the result of the skirmishes and forays which have taken place on the ground and in the air."

At the same time the Mediterranean fleet is ready, and its power "goes a long way to restore the situation created by the collapse of France." Britain is strengthened also by the Turkish guarantees of collaboration.

Mr. Churchill said that "whether you look at the home front or in the Mediterranean theatre I do not think it can be denied we are far better off than anyone would have ventured to predict four or five months ago."

RUNNING FIGHT

In Buenos Aires, although British Embassy officials have declined comment, it is known from a list of "overdue" ships that a powerful German or Italian unit has been at large in the Atlantic.

Informed naval circles said it probably is a pocket battleship. They believe that the British have been close on the heels of this raider, frequently forcing it to change hunting grounds.

One source in Buenos Aires said this warship apparently is following the route of the Graf Spee. This informant suggested that the attack in the North Atlantic indicated she is heading homeward after a long cruise in the South Atlantic.

The position of the reported attack on the convoy is 600 miles west of the declared German blockade zone around the British Isles. Maritime circles in New York expressed belief it is outside the point where British warship escorts pick up convoys bound for Britain.

The 531-foot Rangitiki usually trades between England and New Zealand. She was last reported in August passing through the Panama Canal with 170 refugee children for New Zealand. The Cornish City trades between the United States and England.

Reports reaching maritime circles here indicate that, with the approach of winter, the Nazis may be preparing to launch an intensified campaign with U-boats, plus converted surface raiders. Ships of the latter type such as the Emden, Sea Hawk, Wolf and Prinz Eitel Friedrich achieved notable successes in the First Great War.

Recently German merchantmen, tied up for months in neutral ports, have cleared without taking time to obtain clearance papers. At least one raider has been reported in the South Atlantic and another in the Indian Ocean.

These are believed to be part of a number of 10,000-ton freighters, which were nearing completion in German shipyards at the outbreak of war. They are reported to be fast and easily converted into armed cruisers.

Other reports indicate the Nazis may have established fuel and supply bases on out-of-the-way islands throughout the seven seas to service a fleet of raiders.
