

Gas Heat Wherever You Live

Now, with the Coleman Radiant Heater you can enjoy all the convenience of gas for heating, no matter how far your home is from gas mains. The Coleman makes and burns its own gas. It's a complete heating unit in itself—no piping, no wiring, no installation expense.

Just the thing for the cool days of fall and spring when it is too chilly to be comfortable and not cold enough to start the furnace or heating stove. Also fine for additional heat during severely cold spells of winter.

Radiates penetrating fan-like zone of clean, live heat—like sunshine. Warms lower part of room first, always maintaining a steady even temperature. It's hotter than city gas. It's portable, use it anywhere.

Speedy action—Instant regulation. Double valve-control. Operates on the safety pressure principle like Coleman Quick-Lite Lamps and Lanterns. Uses any good grade of gasoline for fuel. Model 2 price $7.50.

Ask Your Dealer to show you the Coleman Radiant Heater. If he is not supplied, write for full particulars. Address Dept. T. G. 1.

THE OPAL REAPPEAR.

The girl, sitting in the muddy creek-bed, looked down at the object in her palm, then up at her horse, eyeing her sorrowfully from the bank, and made a wry grimace. Weh, Prince, my lad, you surely chose a good place to spill me! But we'll take this ditch again—after I've had a good look at what I've found."

She returned to her examination of the thing she had found under her hand when her horse had stumbled at the jump and precipitated her into the bed of the creek.

The battered, mud-stained object that her fingers had touched was a woman's satin hand-bag, with a jeweled clasp. Its contents, discolored by water and mud, resolved themselves into a scrap of what must once have been a chiffon and face handkerchief; a vanity-case, a folded paper from which the writing was now obliterated.

Norma Collins opened the little case casually, unprepared for the sight that met her eyes.

gift that had come to Cynthia Greer on the eve of her wedding—flamed up at her in the full glory of the midday sun.

Norma gasped and cried: "Oh, no! It can't be! It's too beautiful!"

She held it in her hand, as Cynthia had done, and she felt its fascination, even as Cynthia had. Malevolent, terrible in its flawless beauty.

Norma crooned over it, held it to the sun, turned it this way and that, while her horse, feeling himself forgiven and forgotten, began to crop the grass on the creek-bank.

Finally, it occurred to Norma that she held a fortune in her hand.

Woman Suffered Nearly a Year. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Brought Her Health

Moose Jaw, Sask.—"I am going to try to tell you what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I suffered very badly with dragging-down pains and inflammation, also pains in my right side over my hip and down my whole side into my leg. I had it nearly a year when I went to a doctor and he said I would have to have an operation. But my mother said to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as it saved her life years before. I took two bottles and I found I was better, so I kept on taking it and also used Lydia E. Pinkham's Sanative Wash. I have had two more children since then and am perfectly well. I used to have to lie down two or three times a day, and now I do all my housework without trouble. I always keep the Vegetable Compound in the house as I find a dose now and then helps me. I am willing for you to use this letter any way you see fit and I will answer letters. If I can help any other woman I'd be only too glad to try."—Mrs. ESTHER HOUGHTON, 414 Morse Square, Moose Jaw, Saskatchewan.

hand. So she examined the bedraggled hand-bag again for some trace of identification. But there was none. The only scrap of paper in the bag—Cynthia's marriage certificate—was sodden and indecipherable.

Norma scrambled to her feet, retrieved her hat, and climbed into the saddle. She headed for home, with the black opal safely in the pocket of her jacket. She had come a long way that morning, so she rode fast.

The Collins home was on the edge of a pretty town. It was a two-ornate affair, resembling a pink Venetian palace, with elaborate formal gardens done in English style. Old J. P. Collins, having risen from poverty to the position of one of the richest men in that section of the country, wished to tell the world about it in unmistakable terms.

Norma felt that there was something very wrong about it all. She had seen people laugh at their first glimpse of the house. And so few people ever entered the great bronze gates, or swam in the sunken pool, or played tennis or squash on courts! She was an only child and very lonely, for her mother had died some years before, prosperity had come to the family, she loved her father, loved him not only because he lavished all manner of ridiculous extravagance upon her, but for what he was—a plain, rough, good-hearted soul, with a shrewd business sense, and the naivete of a child. She knew that, when they dined together in the huge, vulgarly ornate, dining-room that opened on an Italian terrace, her father surreptitiously slipped his big feet out of their patent-leather pumps and frequently had to grope for them under the table, as their butler drew back his chair. She knew that his whole soul yearned for a clay pipe, instead of the expensive cigars he smoked with his coffee and port.

And Norma, being very sweet and simple and unaffected, wished with all her heart that he would yield to these honest inclinations, instead of keeping up the pretense of being what he was not.

On the day she had found Cynthia Greer's opal in the creek-bed, she reached home just in time to change for lunch. Her father was waiting impatiently when she came down, crisp and cool in a sports costume.

Got to get back to the office early," he mumbled, as he began to the sun turned it this way and that, while her horse, feeling himself forgiven and forgotten, began to crop the grass on the creek-bank.

Finally, it occurred to Norma that she held a fortune in her hand.

Opposition To Law Grows In Maine

AUGUSTA, Me., Sept. 1.—While controversy is raging in Nova Scotia over the recent action of the authorities in permitting the killing of cow moose, opposition is being expressed by Maine guides against the "one deer" law under which a hunter may kill only one deer during the open season in Maine.

The law, its opponents contend, is more intended to conserve the deer in this state, but on the contrary just as many deer are being killed each season as when the law permitted each licensed hunter to kill two deer a year. It is the theory of the guides that the hunter usually shoots one first deer he happens to see and that later he may sight a larger and more desirable trophy. In such a case, the guides say, the hunter usually shoots the bigger deer as well and when he goes out of the woods, having eaten or otherwise disposed of his first deer, he takes the bigger one home with him and reports it was the only one he shot.

Consequently, the guides declare, fully as many deer are being shot as before the law went into effect, and because it is a violation of the law to have more than one deer in one's possession during the open season, some hunters are needlessly wasting. Both guides and sportsmen believe that New Brunswick has an excellent law for the protection of deer, moose and caribou. In that province the guides are not permitted to carry a rifle into any other game. The sportsmen pay a license fee, and a substantial one for the privilege of hunting and he does his own shooting. If he has good luck and is a good shoot, he gets a deer, a moose or a caribou by his own marksmanship. If he cannot shoot, the animal sportsman pays for the privilege of hunting and he does his own shooting. If he has good luck and is a good shoot, he gets a deer, a moose or a caribou by his own marksmanship. If he cannot shoot, the animal sportsman pays for the privilege of hunting and he does his own shooting. If he has good luck and is a good shoot, he gets a deer, a moose or a caribou by his own marksmanship. If he cannot shoot, the animal sportsman pays for the privilege of hunting and he does his own shooting.

Some folks say that in Maine 90 per cent. of the deer shot each year are really killed by the guides. The sportsmen who employ guides pay them five or six dollars a day and shoot and not infrequently expect them to do the shooting for them. In other words, the guides who are good marksmen and like to shoot deer themselves, are paid to bag a deer for some tenderfoot who couldn't hit one if it were standing right in front of him. It is a little bit of a pity that many a hunter returns home with a fine buck as proof of his prowess, it results in more deer being killed every season than the sportsmen would ordinarily be able to kill.

Persons interested in game conservation contend that if the state desires to conserve its deer, it should adopt laws similar to those of New Brunswick, requiring registered guides to leave their rifles behind when they take parties into the woods and make the sportsmen do their own shooting. It is contended that some guides who are popular with a sportsman often shoot as many as 25 or 30 deer in a season because the sportsmen expect their guides to shoot the deer for them.

Killing a deer after the hunting season has opened is not so easy as it may sound. It requires a quick eye, an expert shot and experienced stalker to be sure of a deer, particularly as the deer become more timid as the season advances. If it were not for the skill of the guides, it is contended, few deer would be taken out of the Maine woods.

Don't Squeeze Black-Heads—Dissolve Them

Squeezing and pinching out blackheads make the pores irritable and cause eruptions of dust and dirt and secretions from the skin, and there is only one safe and sure way and one that never fails to get rid of them—a simple way, too—that is to dissolve them. Just get from any drug store about two ounces of peroxide powder—sprinkle a little blackheads briskly for a few seconds—wash off, and you'll be surprised to see that every blackhead has disappeared, and the skin will be left soft and the pores in their natural condition.
