Voluntary recruiting is failing to meet Needs, Brig. says

QUEBEC, N. V. 25 (CP)—Brig. Gen. Vanier, officer commanding military district No. 5, said in an address here that Canada's present system of recruiting for the armed forces "does not meet our needs."

"Our men are over there where they will be needed most especially when they go into action. If we do not need their call what will happen?"

"At the start of the war" Brig. Vanier said "we did not have a sufficient quantity of the necessary arms and tools—that is not surprising because we did not want war."

"Now our factories are working at full capacity and are shipping by air and sea their products to the battle fields in Europe and Africa. Now we need men to equip these machines and handle these loads."
