making their verdict according to law. Judge Hazzard, charging the jury, spoke as follows:

Charge to The Jury

Having heard the evidence in this matter, there is very little for me to say. The charge against Lincoln Doyle is on William Gormley. You have heard a great deal about the use of a gun. This is necessary as the crime was done by a gun. This is a serious matter and requires great consideration as a case of this kind seldom comes up in this country and to keep such crimes down even-handed justice must be done. Yet you cannot go beyond the scope of your duty and punish an innocent party.

You have heard all the evidence in detail. First from the defence and then by the Crown. You are here to hear the evidence and to get the real intent of the evidence as placed before you. There is no need for me to go over the evidence. It resolves itself into two or three witnesses.

One is the prisoner. His evidence may not have so much weight as an independent witness but you must consider his demeanor, his manner when giving it. You have the injured—the evidence of the charge came from him and his brother—the principal witness. And you have the evidence of outside witnesses. McKenna in his evidence says he saw three men in his yard—James Gormley, William Gormley and Frank MacDougall. He was telling the truth, and he saw three more on the street. One of the first three shouted "alright" or something of the kind to the other three. When he looked to see who the other three were he was assaulted. His was an extraordinary assault—a serious assault by two men. He says they were there before he became unconscious and after the assault they were gone. In this statement you have the fact that the prosecutor was there in the yard.

William says he was not there at all. McKenna says he never saw Doyle, that he wasn't around the place, and never saw him during the whole evening. The first time he saw him was after the assault in his own house. The prisoner corroborated the story.

William says he received a shot and saw Doyle with a gun in his hand. Some person must be mistaken. Who is it likely to be. The prisoner says he was not there, never fired the gun, had no gun. It is for you to decide which to believe. It does not stop there. The prisoner gives an account of himself during the evening. He gives nothing of the assault until he went to McKenna's about ten o'clock. This is corroborated by McKenna. The prisoner's story is corroborated by two women. There is nothing to discredit their story.

Another feature in it you must consider. What was the object these men had in going into McKenna's yard. One says he went after a bottle of rum. But it seems they were after a keg of rum, and were to get it at any cost. Quite unconcerned he says he spoke one and went back after a second, and with a determination to get what was there. These men were there for an improper purpose. It does not matter to you to whom the property belonged. It was there for McKenna's purpose and they had no right as far as they are concerned to touch it. It is for you to say which story that of the prisoner or of Gormley to believe.

The prisoner says he had no gun that evening. William says Doyle had a gun which is practically uncorroborated. McKenna says the prisoner was not on the premises that evening.

It is not evident who fired the shot. To use a gun there must be some exigencies. If these men had his master on his back and assaulting him, he was justified in firing but there was no gun fired then. So there was no necessity of firing the gun that night.

If there is enough evidence against the prisoner to find him guilty, you must, if not you cannot, if there is a reasonable doubt you must discharge him.

LOCAL LOBSTER FISHERMEN TO ASK FOR FALL SEASON

Large Meeting Held Yesterday to Discuss Question, and Fishermen Approve of the Proposed Fall Fishing Season.

A very large number of the lobster fishermen and packers of this Province were present at a meeting held yesterday afternoon in the Board of Trade rooms, and the question of having a fall fishing season in the months of August and September, was thoroughly gone into. Mr. Harry Cox acted as chairman and Mr. Lloyd Cox as secretary. The federal and local representatives present were Mr. R. H. Jenkins, M. P., Mr. J. Augustus MacDonald, M. L. A., Mr. J. B. MacDonald, M. L. A., and Hon. H. D. Lacey, Trade Commissioner.

The first speaker called upon was Hon. H. D. Lacey, who said that the meeting showed the great interest that the fishermen were taking in the matter. It was difficult to tell without an expression of opinion whether all were in favor of the fall season or not, and the speaker said he would like to know if there was any objection that they might have to the fall season, that these objections could be dealt with.

This had been a very poor year for a great many of the fishermen, and they had made but little. The fishermen had been very hard hit in this country by giving them a living. The matter being discussed was one that should be kept out of politics, but a great deal was being said today about immigration and the fact that it was being done by new settlers here. The speaker thought that it would be much better and more to the point, if an effort were made to try and keep our own people here. He would rather have one native Prince Edward Islander than two from abroad.

One objection heard in regard to the fall fishing for lobsters was that it was going to injure the industry. The average output of a packer was usually about 40,000 cases, but this year there had been the more than half a pack. What was the difference between packers in the fall and the other half of the year? The speaker said he had been in the lobster business for many years and he knew that the fall was a stormy season in which to fish, and that the fishing season would be broken up. The speaker, however, would like to see a fall season here this year, if for no other reason than to test the matter out.

Lobsters caught in the fall were different in quality from those caught in the spring. They were stronger and more meaty. The price of lobsters was hardly worth the cost of one month in the fall was not by any means going to hurt the business.

Neither one political party or the other had done very much to help out the fishermen. Much had been done for the farmer, and this was as farming was the basis of the Province. But it looked as if the Government would have to pay more attention to the fishing industry, if the fishermen were to be enabled to make a living.

More should be learned in this Province of the proper methods of curing fish, so that the advantage could be taken of the market, and the fisherman get a better return for their labor. It would be a good idea for all to unite and do something to improve the business all round and have the fish put up in such a manner that they would sell in every grocery store in the country. There was a good deal of cheap fish caught here such as mackerel and herring, that would sell in the South, if properly prepared and packed.

It would be found, concluded the speaker, that there were personal reasons behind most of the objections to the fall season made by the fishermen themselves. Some would not want it because they had it already and were fishing all the time, without any regard to the regulations.

Mr. R. H. Jenkins, M. P., said that judging from letters he had received while in Ottawa, there was some difference of opinion among the fishermen themselves in regard to the fall season. He himself hadn't sought the personal opinion of the Minister of Marine and Fisheries until he could be sure just what the wishes of the fishermen were. The authorities at Ottawa didn't appear to be too sympathetic to the request, but anything at all that was acceptable to the majority of the people, the speaker was prepared to back up. He had himself received telegrams objecting to the fall season. It was impossible for any member of the government to go in and ask for things unless the request was backed up by the people at home. This was a matter that was largely guided by the Marine and Fisheries committee, by which such business was talked over. However, things had been in such a state at Ottawa lately that this committee, which usually met once a week, was not meeting at all, and the speaker assumed that this committee then would have received no advice regarding the matter. But the fishermen must first agree representatives of this Province, both local and federal, to sign a joint telegram addressed to the federal authorities, and expressing the united voice of P. E. I. fishermen in this matter. A committee of six, consisting of the following were so appointed to take action in regard to the matter: Messrs. A. D. MacIsaac, Hermanville; Chester Pratt, St. Peters; P. MacIntyre, Mount Stewart; W. L. MacDonald, Grand Tracadie; B. L. Gallant, Rustico; and Ellis Lacey, Tracadie.

Mr. J. P. MacIntyre of Mount Stewart said that it had been currently reported that the fishermen were in sympathy with the fall season fishing. At the last meeting held for discussion of the matter he had voted for the fall season, and he was still in favor of it. He did not see, then, what grounds there had been for these rumors. If the fall season was going to help out the fishermen he was wholeheartedly for it, and if there was anything he could do to support it he would do it.

Mr. J. B. MacDonald, M. L. A., was the next speaker, and he said that it had been only a short time since the fishermen had come together before to advocate for the late season. The meeting then had been almost unanimous, only three dissenting voices. He had not heard Mr. Jenkins' remarks, but he would like to know if that gentleman had given the meeting to understand that it would be possible for Prince Edward Island to be given consent for fall fishing without affecting New Brunswick and Nova Scotia. The situation on the north side of the island was such that they couldn't get started to fish as early as other parts of the Province. If a fall fishing season in 1926 would help out the fishermen the speaker was in strict accord with such a season for this year, and this year only.

Mr. J. Augustus MacDonald, M. L. A., said that the enthusiasm displayed at this meeting augured well for the fishing industry in this Province in time to come. The attention of the political parties in the past had been devoted more particularly to other industries, and had not been very sympathetic to the fishermen. Owing to this lack of encouragement those engaged in the industry were not getting along as well as they might, however, would like to see a fall season here this year, if for no other reason than to test the matter out.

Mr. R. C. Clark said that he felt the fishermen wanted the fall season, and he saw no reason why they should not have it. The speaker was willing to forfeit $100 to prove that he had stated he was against the securing of the proposed season.

Mr. J. A. McDonald stated that according to the regulations the island could not get privileges without also affecting New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, but if those provinces did not need to fish the island could not need to fish. There was no doubt that a fall season was necessary. The only argument against it was that it injured the next spring's fishing. But in 1907 there had been a fall season, and a good catch had been taken in the following year. Ottawa might have the theory of lobster fishing, but right here among the fishermen themselves was the found the practical side of it. There was no other occupation in favor of it as those two gentlemen were sufficiently impressed with the earnestness of the meeting, it would likely accede to the fishermen's request.

Mr. H. D. Lacey, referring to the rumors that Mr. Harry Cox the chairman and Mr. J. P. MacIntyre, had not been against the fall fishing, said that these rumors were entirely ill-founded. If every fisherman was as earnest in favor of it as those two gentlemen, they would get things done. He suggested that three representatives from each county be appointed to place the case before the authorities.

Mr. John E. Sinclair, called upon to speak, said he would just say that in an important matter of this kind the interests of the whole industry must be considered. Anything that the fishermen and their associates were closely united on, it would do his very best to bring about.

Mr. Ellis Lacey of Tracadie, said that as a fisherman he wished to say a few words on behalf of that body. As fishermen they had never received any benefits from either the local or federal governments. This year the fishermen just wanted to get out of the hole by being granted a full season. If there was any harm done by this it was the fishermen who were the losers. Their request had already been turned down by the Minister of Fisheries. The Island representatives, with the exception of Mr. Messervey had made no fight for the fishermen.

He mentioned that at this point that he had interviewed the minister.

Mr. Lacey went on to say that if it was the same school of lobster that was being fished in both the spring and fall, harm would be done to the industry. On the other hand, if they were different schools it was a loss to the fishermen not to have a fall season.

If they didn't know what they wanted they couldn't expect to get it. Mr. Jenkins said he quite agreed with the preceding speaker that little had been done for the fishermen in the past. Anything that could be done for them would have, he assured them, his whole-hearted support, and he also felt sure that the government would also be willing to do what they wanted. If they agreed on what move they would make he was quite prepared to place it before the proper authorities.

Mr. J. P. MacIntyre of Mount Stewart said that it had been currently reported that the fishermen were in sympathy with the fall season fishing.
