Comments on the Island by visitors

Comments on the Island by visitors

The following extracts are from articles written by agricultural editors who recently visited Prince Edward Island.

Alton Secor "Successful Farming" "I shall never forget that wonderful—a pastoral land where French and English are about equal, living together in perfect harmony because they do not discuss or make an issue of their religion. But it is a Godly people, where divorce is a hearsay only, and where there are no rich, no poor; where the peace and quiet of their simple life is as yet but little broken by the automobile and the tourist.

Where almost every farmer keeps at least a pair or two of foxes, and some have the most famous fox farms of the continent.

This Island is of red soil, and I mean red. It is only 110 miles long and from 2 to 34 miles wide. Its coastline is all cut into by fingers of the sea. Sand dunes along the coast some rolling land covered with neat farms, every fence, whether of stone, rails, or hedge, is set on a ridge of earth like a dike. Those pole fences have been there for 80 or 90 years and are good yet. Like in New Brunswick, and the river part of Quebec, the coast-line of Prince Edward Island is dotted with fishing villages, where you see nets spread to dry, and fishing craft at anchor or beached.

C. A. Cobb "Southern Ruralist" "And there's nothing this side of Denmark like P. E. I. This Island is undoubtedly the most beautiful and most prosperous agricultural community in all North America. Premier Lea, the host of the writer throughout our tour of the Island, is authority for the statement that wealth there is probably more evenly distributed among the people than in any other place in the new world. The land is productive, the farms are beautifully laid out and well kept, the buildings are attractive, there is much meadow, and the very most has been made of native trees. It all combines into the most beautiful pastoral scene to be found this side of the old world. Evidence of happiness and satisfaction are everywhere. The premier could not remember foreclosure. There are no cities. There is no industrialism. Taxes are very moderate. Premier Lea is a farmer. He and Mrs. Lea and their fine family of boys and girls live on their farm of several hundred acres."

L. A. Niven, Progressive Farmer on Seed Potatoes "On Prince Edward Island the growing of certified Irish potatoes for seed purposes is extensive industry. The average yield for the whole province is right at 180 bushels per acre but some of the farmers make as high as 450 to 500 bushels. George Weymouth, "Indiana Farmers Guide" "About 87 per cent of the land on P. E. I. is now being farmed, and this 'garden province' is fully developed.

In fact the Island is pretty much an agricultural paradise. It is crescent shaped about 150 miles long, not more than 25 miles across at the widest place, and the shore line is cut up with numerous bays. The province is said to have no paupers and no millionaires, but there is a very fine general prosperity which even the most casual glance at the beautifully cultivated farms and well-kept homes could not fail to observe. Remarks on fox farming Prince Edward Island is almost entirely rural. The soil is a delicate red, the roads are good and although automobiles were forbidden until a few years ago, now practically every farm family has a car. T. A. McNeal, Topoka Daily Capital

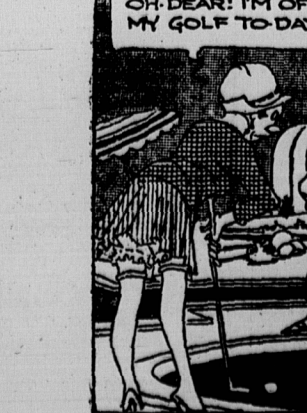

"It seems to me that as fair an Island as the eye ever looked upon is that which lies in the bend of the arm of the Gulf of St. Lawrence, known as the Island of Prince Edward. Henry Ward Beecher the celebrated preacher orator and author was once quoted as saying that this Island is the 'gem of the northern seas.' The surface of the Island is a beautifully rolling lowland varied by the chain of little hills, none of them more than 500 feet in height. (Statistics) If I were so situated that I could do it, I would hunt up a location on Prince Edward Island, and when the hot winds blow, I would just go there and fish and bathe in the cooling waves that lap the beach, and let the old world wag while men elsewhere were engaged in their futile arguments about politics, religion, and the weather." (Mr. McNeal goes extensively into details regarding the fox industry on the Island, and other vital statistics.) H. L. Coakline American Agriculturist "On Prince Edward Island there are 80,000 people and 80% of these are engaged in farming. The farms have a general air of prosperity and there are few foreclosures and few sales of farm property. On the Island the persons who do not go to church are rather looked down upon by the general public. Divorce is practically unknown, although we understand there was one divorce there, about 60 years ago. What a fine thing it would be if someone could determine the reasons responsible for it to the United States (Statistics on fox farming and the seed potato industry.) An Irishman was accused of cowardice. "Well, he said, 'It's better to be a coward for fivve minutes than a dead man all your loife.'"

The Hidden Qualities of KROEHLER LIVING ROOM FURNITURE ensure its Lasting Beauty

WHEN you buy upholstered furniture, remember that much of its real usefulness depends upon its hidden construction. Many Chesterfield Suites look alike, and the prices seem low—but ask yourself "What can be underneath at that price?" Furniture prices bear a relation to what the furniture costs to produce. "Skimp the quality and cut down the cost" doesn't make fine furniture. By refusing to "skimp" the quality—by realizing that the foundation of upholstered furniture (the parts you don't see) must be soundly built of finest materials—by making sure that the inner construction of every Kroehler piece is as sturdy as its appearance is beautiful—Kroehler has built up a business that is the largest of its kind in the world.

Why Kroehler Values can not be equalled

Fourteen huge factories are kept busy supplying the demand. When you choose Kroehler Furniture you get the benefit of the manufacturing economies through this large volume production and immense buying power.

Kroehler famous "Hidden Qualities" ensure the finest furniture you can buy. Judged by every standard of true quality—of beauty—design and sound construction—and value-for-price paid—Kroehler-made furniture has no equal.

Kroehler "Hidden Qualities" mean frames of selected kiln-dried hardwood, firmly glued, doweled and corner-blocked—spring steel under-construction, that will give a lifetime of satisfactory service—more comfortable cushions of fine, interlocking springs in individual pockets, to form a single unit—padding of new, clean, white, felted cotton and filling of high grade moss and flax fibre. These are the "hidden qualities" of construction which you don't see, but on which your Living Room furniture depends for long life, and the continued charm of appearance.
