Personals

Mrs. W. Chester S. McLure, of Charlottetown, P. E. I., who is spending the seasonal months in Ottawa, is in Toronto, for a few days visiting her daughter, Miss Lena McLure.—Ottawa Journal.

Mr. and Mrs. Eddie Brown entertained at a very enjoyable dinner party before the St. Patrick's play for Mr. and Mrs. V. Kilmaster, Mr. and Mrs. Joseph O'Neill and Mr. and Mrs. Ambrose O'Neill of Montreal. The table was centered with daffodil, shamrock and green tapers.

Pownal

Mr. and Mrs. Wendall Jones expect to take up residence shortly at East Baltic.

The many friends of Mr. J. R. Brown will be pleased to know that he has recovered sufficiently to return home from the Prince Edward Island Hospital where he has been undergoing surgical treatment.

Miss Katie Moore was among the visitors to the City on Saturday. Miss Moore, who has lived the last number of years in the United States, is spending the winter with her brother, A. C. Moore. All her old friends extend to her a hearty welcome back to her native land.

A happy event took place at the hall here recently when neighbors and friends from Pownal and surrounding districts gathered to honor our Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Jones.

To the strains of Here they come, here they come, young and blith and gay, we welcome them, we welcome them to live in Pownal, the bride and groom were escorted to their seats on the platform by Mr. and Mrs. Glendon Burhoe. At this point a humorous pre-nuptial one-sided telephone conversation was heard of one causing much merriment, after which a beautifully decorated basket of gifts was brought to the platform. Previous to the opening of the gifts Miss Mabel Enman came forward and in a neat and humorous speech offered congratulations and welcomed Mrs. Jones to Pownal.

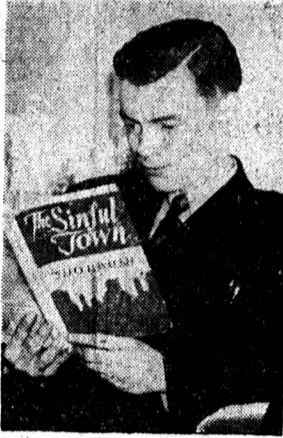

The gifts were opened and arranged on the table by Mrs. Cyril Jones. The groom on behalf of his bride, thanked all present for their lovely gifts and good wishes. After congratulations had been extended by all present a jolly sing-song followed with Mrs. MacKinnon at the piano, a unique feature of same being a song suitable to the occasion composed by Mrs. Wilbur Jones, whose ingenuity is a wonderful asset to any program. The colour scheme for the decorations was lovely in pink and white. Mrs. Charl Jones being in charge of same. At the close of the program a delightful lunch was served.

Miss Mabel Enman was a week-end visitor here at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Jones. Miss Enman was among those attending the Drama course held in Hearts Hall, Charlottetown, the week of March seventh to twelfth inclusive. Representatives from urban districts came as far east as Souris and west to Cape Traverse, Charlottetown was well represented by members of the Little Theatre and others interested in the drama, which is an art in itself, yet in its infancy in Prince Edward Island. Mrs. Houle and Mrs. Henry, Charlottetown artists, assisted Mr. Melkielejohn, who is director of the Ottawa Drama League. A graduate of St. Andrew's University, Fife, Scotland, he has spent some twenty years in Canada, one of his highlights being when he directed and acted in the play which won the Barry Jackson trophy awarded for the best Canadian play in 1948. Mr. Melkielejohn certainly knew his acting and those who sat at his feet three sessions a day, six days a week as did Sours, Pownal and Cape Traverse, received a wealth of information invaluable in play production. It was unfortunate that more communities were not represented. Mrs. Laird, president of the Drama Festival for Prince Edward Island, was in attendance, requesting more entries for 1949.

INJURED DURING STORM

SHIPPEGAN, N. B., March 18 — (CP) — Romeo Archer, Tracadie, was taken to Tracadie Hospital today with a head injury suffered in an accident resulting from a blinding snowstorm. The storm had forced him to stop his truck at Inkerman Bridge. He was standing in front of it when a car driven by Charles Iglah, Newcastle, struck the other vehicle and inflicted a glancing blow upon Archer.

Island Author Wins Favourable Comment

Exposition Press, 164 Nassau St., New York, N. Y., writes:—

"Such prominent citizens as the Hon. J. A. Bernard, Lt. Governor, and Dr. James B. Blanchard, ex-Mayor, City of Charlottetown, have given strong praise to 'The Sinful Town', first novel of Mr. Leo P. Walsh, a native and resident of Charlottetown. Governor Bernard says of it: 'Well written, delightfully intriguing, and full of interesting situations; it contains a moral of great worth.' Dr. Blanchard says: 'I have just finished reading 'The Sinful Town.' I may truthfully say that it is without a doubt the best book I have read. With high reading interest, I read the very attractive novel in one sitting."

"The Sinful Town" is an attack on society's treatment of illegitimate children. The author, who is only twenty-two, frankly assumes a crusader's role as he describes the terrifying experiences and emotions of Jimmy Fabelwood, who grows up in a New Hampshire town, persecuted not only by scandal-mongers but also by the prevailing attitude of society in general. In discussing his theme, Mr. Walsh pleads for a change in this attitude. 'Place the responsibility where it belongs,' he says. 'Place it upon the parties responsible for bearing illegitimate children — not upon the innocent youngsters themselves.' Then he adds, 'I want to change the reader's whole attitude in regard to illegitimate children. I want people to look upon them as being normal — the same as any other children.'

"Well known in Canadian circles, Mr. Leo P. Walsh claims to be the first writer of adult fiction on Prince Edward Island. He follows in the wake of the world-famous juvenile writer from the Island, Lucy Maud Montgomery, author of the immortal 'Anne of Green Gables,' and a long series of books in this line. Mr. Walsh had studied at Business College, and devotes himself at the present time exclusively to the writing of fiction. At this time he is working on a novel which has a locale shared by three countries, finally winding up in Canada. No date for the completion of the book has yet been announced."

IN MEMORIAM

In loving memory of Mrs. Hall Sudsbury, who departed this life March 19th, 1948.

Peacefully sleeping, resting at last. The world's weary troubles and trials are past.

In silence she suffered, in patience she bore.

Always Remembered by Husband and Family.

IN MEMORIAM

DAVID VINCENT MacDONALD

The death of David Vincent MacDonald, six months old son of Mr. and Mrs. Leonard V. MacDonald, 26 Alexander Drive, Charlottetown, occurred suddenly in the Prince Edward Island Hospital on Thursday, February 24. He leaves to mourn his parents and two little sisters, Joanne and Nancy.

The remains were taken to Tyne Valley Saturday evening to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ernest G. Ellis, his grandparents. The funeral was held on Monday, February 28, with a short service at the home, followed by service in the Presbyterian Church conducted by Rev. W. A. Young, of the Presbyterian Church. The hymns sung were, "There's a Friend for Little Children," "By Cool Sliam's Shady Hill," and "When He Cometh."

The floral tributes were many and beautiful, silent expressions of sympathy to the bereaved family. The pallbearers were Eimer Biggar, Vaughn Ramsay, Orville Williams and Warren Nisbet. Interment was in the church cemetery.

Secrets Of A Fingerprint Sleuth

By Chief Det. Insp. Sydney S. Birch, late of the Yard

Million-To-One Clue Caught The Monocled Killer

In more than a quarter of a century at Scotland Yard I never met a criminal with more misguided talent—and worse luck—than Harold Dorien Trevor, once known to all London as The Man with the Monocle, and now buried in Pentonville Prison yard with only a tulip bulb for a monument.

Trevor, a model of that tall, glacial type of Englishman whose tie does all his boasting for him, committed hundreds of crimes. He posed a peer of the realm, a bishop, an Army colonel, a commander in the Royal Navy—but though his acting was superb, he was always found out. Things never went right for him.

He finished up like many another crook before him—by committing murder. Even then he was unclueker than he need have been. His last crime was one of four murders that broke in London within the same week of October, 1941. Trevor used a lifetime's criminal guile to make his escape.

The three other murderers just blundered away with guilty hands into hiding. They escaped. Trevor hanged. Yes, fate always had a twisted smile for Harold Dorien Trevor.

His Saville-Row Manner

The crime that cost him his life? It happened this way: Trevor strolled languidly up the six wide steps that led to the pillared front doorway of the Victorian mansion in Elisham road, Holland Park, where widowed Mrs. Theodora Greenhill had advertised a basement room to let at 30s a week.

On this brisk, raw morning Trevor, 10 days out of gaol, was posturing, in Saville-Row clothes, as a doctor. Mrs. Greenhill, never suspecting her aristocratic visitor had spent 40 of his 64 years in prison cells, apologised for the defects of the basement room. Trevor graciously permitted himself to become her tenant.

She invited him into her morning room, elegant with slender mahogany and rosewood tables, silken lampshades, gilt framed oil-paintings on smooth walls; explained she was alone in the house. One daughter was in America, another was absent for several days.

Then, blushing, Mrs. Greenhill observed an empty quart stout bottle on the floor alongside her ornate writing-bureau. "Dear, oh dear, I cannot think, indeed, how that came to be left there!" She stopped to gather up the offending bottle.

"Allow me," murmured Trevor. He picked up the bottle. Mrs. Greenhill inclined her elderly head in appreciation of his courtesy and sat down at the bureau to write a receipt for Trevor's first week's rent. Trevor clubbed her viciously behind the ear with the bottle.

Trevor had intended to stun her so he could rob the house. Even so, it was a surprising thing for him to do; he had never previously used clumsy violence. Whatever his intention, he should have known that nothing he planned, with his kind of luck, was likely to run smoothly. Mrs. Greenhill had a thin skull. The blow cracked it. She slumped dead from her chair.

Battling with all his cool brain against the threat of the noose, which had been the last thought in his mind that morning as he paid the pink carnation into his frock-coat buttonhole, Trevor went carefully, quickly about the job of pillaging the house without leaving clues. He took a jewelled ring from Mrs. Greenhill's finger, left her wedding ring. He stolen money, several other small articles of fair value. Only one passer-by in the street saw him leave.

Trevor decided to lay a false trail. "King's Cross station as fast as you can," he called to a prowling taxi. By Trevor's reckoning the passer-by should have kept on walking. But fate again took a hand. The man worked for the local authority; and was still in the street when Mrs. Greenhill's elder daughter arrived home unexpectedly from America, found her mother's body, and gave the alarm within an hour of the crime.

So Scotland Yard's Murder Squad found the workman, Mr. Levy, with the murderer's description fresh in his memory. That sort of thing always did have to happen to Trevor!

Our Travelling Laboratory In my office, Department C3 of the Metropolitan Police Fingerprint Department, high under the red turrets of Scotland Yard, my phone bell buzzed at three o'clock that afternoon.

It was the crisp voice of Chief Inspector Bill Salisbury: "Hello, Syd—Better tell Superintendent Cherrill, woman found dead in Elisham-road. Will you bring your fingerprint kit?" (Continued on page 11)
