In Memoriam

MARY ANN MATTHEWS
The death occurred early Sunday morning, Feb. 18th, at the home of her granddaughter, Mrs. Elby Ford, Charlottetown, of Mrs. Mary Ann Matthews, widow of the late Uriah Matthews of Pleasant Grove, in her 99th year. She had been well and active until the last and her death came as a great shock to her relatives and friends. She was well and favourably known both in the city and country, being the daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Benjamin Hughes of West Covehead and the eldest of a family of nine children, three sons and two sisters, Charlotte, Mrs. George Auld, Winsloe, and Bydessa, Mrs. Herbert Hall of Arlington, Mass.

When a young girl she married Uriah Matthew and moved to Pleasant Grove where she lived all her life until nine years ago when she moved to Charlottetown to reside with her granddaughter, Mrs. Elby Ford, whom she had followed from a baby of 2-2 years. She had many ups and downs, having lost two sons and a daughter some years ago.

She was a faithful member of the Methodist Church and was never hardly known to miss a Sunday. Her husband predeceased her thirteen years ago. She leaves to mourn her loss one daughter (Charlotte) Mrs. Elby Ford, St. Averard, and two sons, Wesley and John, both of York, beside nine grandchildren, eighteen great grandchildren, and one great grandchild, which she was very fond of. This being the fifth generation. Her funeral was held on Monday, Feb. 19th, at 11 o'clock, at the funeral home, service being conducted by the Rev. T. E. MacLennan of Trinity United Church. Then her remains were entombed in the York United Church where service was conducted by Rev. J. A. Nicholson of York.

LAZY BEES A PROBLEM
SNEYDY, Australia (AP)—There are all sorts of angles to gardening in the tropics. The Australian Army planned to make itself self-sufficient in vegetables in the Northern Territory, but the native bees were found to be so lazy that crop pollination failed. So they imported bees from the south.

CHAPTER 49

It was now generally accepted that Rhoda had an "understanding" with David Cohen, though themselves did not fully understand just how they were to work this out. It had seemed best to them both for Rhoda to stay at the homestead that summer with Dexter, keeping the children with her, and for David to pay week-end visits there. Rhoda and David had practically decided that they might get married just before school opened, and the fact that David could come back and forth from St. Johnsbury to the near-by village where she lived.

David was very pleased to have the opportunity of meeting Judith at the junction. And her family had been so kind to invite her to stay in their home. He hoped you wouldn't feel that way about me either. This is my car, right here. May I help you in? Judith was accustomed to getting in and out of cars without assistance, but she didn't mind. She answered his pleasant question about her trip curiously and the fact that she had been somewhat silent. But as he began to slow down, before they reached the house on Farm Hill, she asked him to stop. "But you've got to go around to the side door. Perhaps you didn't know."

"But she isn't here all on in the front! Every time I have been here with Rhoda we've gone up the Cobblestone walk and in at the door."

"Well, perhaps visitors do now. But the family never would."

Well, well, Judith! It is good to see you! How well you're looking. We were waiting for you at the front door because we were sort of getting the lights on with me. David stopped? I suppose he was in a hurry to see Rhoda, and the children, but she's not here. She's pleased if he'd come in for just a minute.

"I didn't ask him to stop. I thought this was a family coming. I didn't know it was to be received formally, like company, or to bring anyone in with me."

"Well you see David's getting to be almost like one of the family. The children are here off and on all the time, and they've been round at Dexter's here and playing with Lucky, so it's natural for her to come in. I don't think you should do just as you've a mind to. I do want you should come out to see the summer kitchen though. I can hardly believe your eyes."

"I can hardly believe them now. What have you done to everything?"

"Why we've just opened up the house more and put it all to rights. I had your father waxed the floors and rubbed down the old furniture. We haven't bought a thing new, but it's all been cleaned and heated equipment, and we were lucky about getting under the wire on those, before everything was frozen."

Serena was already proudly leading the way into the summer kitchen. She put her hat on and she did not even notice that Judith was looking about her with the compressed lips which, when she always presaged a storm. Unconscious of the impending outbreak, Serena prattled on. "I didn't know it was to be received formally, like company, or to bring anyone in with me."

Criticism
Why he went home early to-night. He and your father harvested the last of the oats just about half an hour ago. It's the biggest crop, Judith, that anyone—
"Well, where's Alex?"
"He's upstairs. She's been going to bed early this last week. I'm afraid she gets real tired, though she hasn't had any sleep. I think it is very close to her time, Judith. But she wants you should come right in to see her."

"No, Judith, it's just the same as ever. Dexter slept there all winter of course, but I must say I was careful not to disturb anything. And now there's a bathroom leading out of it, the one we made out of the middle room. I think you'll find it real convenient. And the West chamber's going to be the nicest nursery. Come up stairs, Judith, do."

"Have you taken the bees up already, Daniel?"
"Yes Mother, I figured you and Judith wouldn't miss me for a minute and I was right. You were so busy showing off the house and Judith was so busy criticizing it, you didn't either of you see when I went out of the room!"
