A HUSBAND TO MARCIA

By CAROLYN BEECHER

Chapter XIII

A bit subdued, perhaps a little frightened because of John's sternness, his evident sorrow over her deceit, Marcia seemed to realize that she must do something to win back the confidence he still expressed in her, but which she could see had received a shock. Not that Marcia thought she had really done anything for which she should be censured. If John had given her a larger allowance it would not have happened. Nevertheless she would be extra nice to him, she said to herself, until he had forgotten all about it.

This, she did not realize, John tried to do. He must forget. He gave her a thankfulness out of a proportion to the way the affair had affected her. Marcia's attempt to assure him of her repentance, which he believed genuine.

For a time she ceased to urge him to get out in the evening. He seemed to have a more entertaining time when she forgot to remonstrate when he failed to don a dinner jacket one night when Bob and Nell French came to dinner. She refrained from mentioning cards, and hurried home from the clubs so that she was at home when he arrived.

"I feel like a saint," she told Nell French whom she allowed to believe John objected to her playing only because she was late in getting home. "But my shoulders and see if you don't feel the wings sprouting."

"Not yet, Marcia," Nell replied after she had done as Marcia requested. Then: "Aren't men queer creatures! They can come home as late as they like, but just when you know when they come in and—wowie!"

"You've said it! Why, John acts like a bear with a sore head if he gets home first. That's why I hurry away after we finish playing instead of staying to chat. He doesn't really approve of my playing, you know."

"He used to like a game himself." "That's the funny part of it! He always liked cards, but since I joined the club he scarcely ever plays. He says one gambler in the family is enough."

"How like a man! As long as they do a thing it is all right. But just let a woman do it, then look out. What does he say to your losing? You have been playing in rotten luck lately."

"He knows nothing about it."

STOPPED HER HEADACHES

Years Of Suffering Ended By "Fruit-a-lives"

112 HANCOCK ST., ST. JOHN, N. B. "It is with pleasure that I write to tell you of the great benefit I received from the use of your medicine 'Fruit-a-lives', made from fruit juices. I was a great sufferer for many years from Nervous Headaches and Constipation. I tried everything, consulted doctors, but nothing seemed to help me until I tried 'Fruit-a-lives'."

After taking several boxes, I was completely relieved of these troubles and have been unusually well ever since. Miss ANNIE WARD. A box, 6 for $2.50, trial size, 20c. All dealers or sent postpaid by Fruit-a-lives Limited, Ottawa.

Marcia prevaricated. "For heaven's sake, don't say anything before him! I pay my losses out of my allowance. It is no one's business whether I win or lose."

"Your husband must be very generous. Why don't you get that new model car we talked about? Claire Sanders has one, an it's a beauty. Your car is all right, of course, but nowadays one always gets the latest model."

"I am thinking of getting a larger car," Marcia replied. "I saw a lovely one the other day and—"

"My Marcia! You are getting nifty!"

Now Marcia had no thought of a larger car until after this conversation with Nell French. She had ever given up, with many sighs, the idea of changing her coupe for the latest model. Given it up because she must, at least for the present, until John forgot about her loss at cards, her putting up her ring as security.

But she had been so good he was forgetting—she could see plainly. He was working very hard, very long hours, but when he was at home he gave no sign that he doubted her in the least—or that he had heard this had been her plan, but having given his word he must keep it.

Nell French had been right when she said John Aldrich had formerly had liked cards. He had played an "easy" game at the club before he married, a game where the stakes were small and good feeling prevailed. A gentleman's game. But since Marcia had become so infatuated with cards he had not played. As Marcia had heard the family enough. Yet until he knew of Marcia's losses he had no idea she played so stiff a game. The remark had been a jocular one.

John now seldom went to his club. He had paid his dues and so retained his membership, although he was often tempted to let it go. Yet the occasional meeting with his fellow members in the streets, their hearty handshakes, their clearly voiced regrets that he so seldom used the club, were a source of comfort to him.

"I can't afford to stay in and I can't afford to get out," he said grimly to himself one day after he had met Larry Summerlin, who urged him to go to lunch with him at the club. John had accepted, and the real welcome he received from the members, the "Glad to see you, sir!" from his favorite waiter, gave him a homey feeling of content.

"I'll hang on as long as I can," he muttered after he had bidden Larry good afternoon and hurried to his office, "or rather as long as Marcia will let me," he added grimly.

An Autumn Woodland

How still the woods, today! The birds are silent, not as in the spring.

When each gay songster strained his throat to sing. Or so it seemed. Now, not a note comes to your ear from any feathered throat.

Upon you pine a crow sits silent watchful and alone. Like a statue that ne'er life has known.

A catbird slips in silence through the brush. That stealthy scratcher there's a weedy thrush.

That chipmunk there, he looks just like a knot. Upon that stump, so still in that one spot.

Even the leaves don't rustle as they did in May. They rest perhaps after a long, long play.

With summer zephyrs and the little stream Has hushed its prattle, or so it would seem.

It runs so smoothly that, did not catch gleams of sunshine as it ripples by. You'd doubt it moved. How utter is the peace.

That's brooding here where movements seem to cease.

Can this be death? Ah no these are not dead. Life's everywhere, around, beneath, overhead.

Nature but rests, and in the sunshine basks. Absorbing strength perchance for later tasks.

The birds seek strength for their long southward flight. The squirrels store up food against the night.

When Winter will be here. The plants and trees Store up their strength and meanwhile take their ease.

When Winter comes they'll need perchance to strive. With deep set roots, to suffer and survive.

To battle old Jack Frost, to rise and stand In Spring's green glory in a re-born land.

But that's not now. In vale, in swamp, on hill They hold their health. How still they are. How still. How still.

years ago as four young soldiers were advancing to enter the battle of the Somme, they made a pact that if alive, they would meet at four o'clock on the afternoon of September 1st 1921 in the Alexandra Hotel in Winnipeg. One of them was "Ted" Yeomans of Belle ville, who has gone to keep the appointment. Another is on the way from Edmonton; another on his way from British Columbia and the fourth from California. Lieut. Yeomans lost track of his friends for a while, while he was a prisoner in Germany, but all got into touch with each other by correspondence after the close of the war.
