

PIMPLES ON FACE ITCHED BADLY

Skin Became Scaly, Arms Later Affected, Cuticura Heals.

"I suffered from pimples that broke out all over my face. They were large and red, and itched so badly that I scratched them until they would bleed. My skin became scaly and started to peel off, especially around my mouth. Later my arms became affected with pimples. I began using Cuticura Soap and Ointment and they helped me. I continued the treatment and in about two weeks I was healed." (Signed) E. M. Bradley, 185 Queen St., Charlottetown, P. E. I., Aug. 11, 1926.

Use Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Talcum to promote and maintain skin purity, skin comfort and skin health; the Soap to cleanse and purify, Ointment to soothe and heal, and Talcum to powder and refresh.

Sample Each Free by Mail. Address Canadian Agents: "Easabee" Ltd., Montreal. Price, Soap, 10c; Ointment 15c and 50c; Talcum 25c.

SMILES

GABBY GERTIE

SONIA

By VIDA HURST

"I can't believe you'd refuse me on account of that," he said, puzzled. "If I thought you really loved me I'd never let that stand in my way. But I'm not sure. Do you love me, Sonia?"

She turned the mystery of her eyes upon him.

"Do you expect me to tell you?"

"Then you do?"

"Perhaps?"

"You don't?"

She smiled.

"Think whatever you like. Marriage between us would be impossible."

She flattered herself that she had managed that scene rather well.

In the car returning to Chicago, Sonia found herself wondering if Don really had proposed. It seemed impossible, sitting beside him, listening to his gay, inconsequential chatter of incidents in medical school or the more serious stories of lives with which he had come into contact at the Hospital. Utterly impersonal, his dark eyes gazed cheerfully into hers.

He loved his work. She could see that it was like a great flame, lighting up his life. No girl's refusal could break Don Stillwater, she thought, regretfully. His wife would lead a satisfying sort of life, playing the good samaritan to poor families, when his professional skill was no longer necessary, going with him on his trips to Europe. He had a way of repeating the most ordinary stories with so much sympathy that Sonia found herself utterly absorbed. She preferred him to Walter Henderson. He was so young and full of enthusiasm, in spite of his experience. Burning with a desire to share his gifts with a world sodden with self-indulgence on one side, and gaunt with grinding, abject misery on the other.

Sonia's eyes were shining, the color high on her cheeks from her day out of doors. If it were not for Franklin Crane she would have been glad to walk through life by Don's side. Sheltered without being restricted, always amused, always interested!

When she opened her eyes she found Don looking at her, curiously. His face wore the scientific, investigating expression which she resented.

"Did you ask me something?" she inquired, suspiciously.

"It doesn't matter. You were lost in dreams, weren't you, Sonia?"

"She could not deny it."

"Won't you tell me what they were?"

Her green eyes were baffling, secretive. She determined that at least her thoughts should remain inviolate even from him.

When he left her at her door he said: "I may not see you again, my dear."

"Why not?"

"Why should I? I have no intentions of whining over something I can't have."

"But I do enjoy being with you so much. I love to talk with you."

"Just now it's better not. When I return from Berlin I shall hope to see more of you."

She said, perversely: "You think you'll have me cut off your mind by that time?"

"Out of my heart, Sonia. The world is full of a number of things, although it's rather difficult for me to see them just now."

His voice was so controlled she suspected him of teasing.

"No! I didn't think your declaration was very serious. I suppose you can scarcely wait to get to Berlin, where you can start flirting to your heart's content?"

"On the contrary," he said in a voice like steel. "If I thought you had one single atom of real affection for me I'd drag you off by the hair if necessary. I'd marry you tonight."

Without another word he walked away, leaving Sonia humiliated and bewildered on the steps of her apartment house.

Inside, she found a note from Maxine, telling her to call Franklin. Without waiting to remove sweater or tam she picked up the telephone.

"Did you just get in?" he asked.

"Yes, I've been hiking with an old friend of mine."

"Not Walter Henderson?"

"No, Franklin. How is your mother?"

"All right. But don't start for ten minutes."

"I'm starting now."

Her relaxed nerves tightened like taut wires. She flashed about the room, turning on lamps, lighting the fire and incense in Maxie's brass bowl. Then, dropping her clothes as she ran, she jumped into a hot bath. She had just time to start dressing when the doorbell rang. She went to admit him, wrapped in the gray negligee, as freshly fragrant as a half-open rose.

Franklin seized her in his arms. He devoured her with kisses, hard, stabbing, painful kisses, that bruised ed Sonia's white flesh, but left her clinging about his neck.

"O, how I love you."

"I want you to."

They were stammering words and phrases, but half-conscious of what they implied.

"Sonia, our week-end shall be next week. Mother will be all right for a while."

"Mac isn't sure he can arrange to get away so soon."

"He'll have to. He can manage it some way. If he doesn't I'll take you, anyway."

She shivered in his arms, torn between the desire to be carried off and the knowledge that Mac must go. She could not trust herself to go alone.

Little voices within her dimmed in her ears: "If you weaken the least bit," there are experiences in life no woman wants to endure. "Our Sonia is always a good girl."

"No!" she cried, tortured by them into resistance.

She did not want to resist. She wished only to be swept away like that sweet, intoxicating tide which seemed to engulf her. But the inner voices would not leave her alone.

"Franklin, please."

"I love you..."

"Oh, don't," she wailed, raging at those restraints which pushed her from him like invisible hands. "Nothing can keep you from me, Sonia."

She brushed her hand across her eyes and sat straight.

"But something does, I'm not responsible for it. I deserve no credit for it." Her voice was bitter. Something in her chilled tone carried conviction.

"I see," he said.

She was silent as he rose, tumbling for his coat and hat, kissing her triumphantly.

"I have to go now, sweetheart."

She went to bed, but not to sleep. The comfortable incidence her day with Don had brought was shattered irrevocably. She wondered if Mac would arrange to go next Saturday. What would she do if he did not? No longer capable of controlling a situation which was becoming too much for her, she decided, shivering, that she dare not go with him now.

She wished to marry Franklin, to go to him with nothing clandestine between them. But all the warm young blood in her veins fought for him.

"Why is it?" she cried. "Why is life so hard? Always snatching away the one thing you want most? Hundreds of girls marry the man they love. Why can't I?"

For the first time she wondered if her life might be controlled by a sinister fate over which she had no influence. The future was not the clear, untroubled crystal she had thought, but a clouded surface, dark and disturbed with foreboding!

Ship Us Your Silver Cross and Red Fox and get more for them

Right now we are having a tremendous demand for Silver, Cross and Red Fox and we want all we can get. We are therefore, paying ranchers the highest possible prices.

20 YEARS IN BUSINESS

For over 20 years we have been buying and selling furs with absolute satisfaction to both buyer and shipper. That is why we receive and handle more furs than any other house in New York City. We cordially invite you to visit us.

HOW DO WE DO BUSINESS

Ship us your furs and place your valuation on them. We will then immediately wire you our offer—whether it is higher or lower than your valuation.

If your valuation is lower we do not take advantage of it but pay the highest prices the skins are worth.

If we cannot meet your prices we hold the skins subject to your approval of our offer.

And whether or not we buy your foxes we PAY ALL SHIPPING CHARGES—there's no expense to you.

YOU TAKE NO CHANCES

Ship to us in ANY quantity—you take no chances. We have a quarter of a million dollars CASH invested in our business and we pay IMMEDIATELY upon receipt of skins.

WIRE OR TELEPHONE

Wire what you have at our expense and we'll wire our quotation. Better still, telephone us at our expense if you have a quantity of Silver foxes and our representative will call on you.

REFERENCES

CAUTION

We earnestly advise against speculating with Silver Foxes for higher prices on holding them until such large quantities accumulate which may cause a sharp decline in prices

WE PAY THE DUTY

Put your lowest possible prices wanted on your skins to be held by customs for examination by us. We pay the duty over and above our quotation.

Terrifying Spectacle of Rats

(By British United Press.)

LONDON, December 24.—The deluge of rain which fell on London recently has emptied the suburb of Edmonton of its rats. They took leave at dawn—a great army of them—and reached a fairly safe lodging in the depths of Epping Forest.

It was an orderly retreat and there was little of the "tumbling" mentioned in Browning's "Pied Piper." British rats are too phlegmatic for that sort of conduct. The only thing that disturbed the orderly march was a lorry, and then they just swerved to the footpath and afterwards reformed their ranks.

Dogs along the road kept a respectful distance. They barked at the light of day with men and boys to encourage, did they cause a great slaughter among the rodents in the forest.

They were all brown rats—no black rats or tawny rats, but plenty of great rats, small rats, lean rats and brawny rats. In strength they must have numbered several thousands.

An eye-witness states that the army was headed by a gaunt old leader. They pattered and scampered along the Lea Valley-road a dense brown mass. The patterning of their feet and their constant squeals added a terrifying effect to the scene.

They covered the whole of the road. Workmen who were overtaken by them ran aside to safety, and several cyclists turned hastily back from the advancing horde.

The last great exodus of rats occurred in 1899, when owing to the floods hundreds of thousands moved from the City of London into West Sussex. The rats at night on that occasion were so congested that people feared to go out of doors.

Traveling on endless tracks, a motor harrow of German invention can make short turns.

Terrifying Spectacle of Rats

(By British United Press.)

LONDON, December 24.—The deluge of rain which fell on London recently has emptied the suburb of Edmonton of its rats. They took leave at dawn—a great army of them—and reached a fairly safe lodging in the depths of Epping Forest.

It was an orderly retreat and there was little of the "tumbling" mentioned in Browning's "Pied Piper." British rats are too phlegmatic for that sort of conduct. The only thing that disturbed the orderly march was a lorry, and then they just swerved to the footpath and afterwards reformed their ranks.

Dogs along the road kept a respectful distance. They barked at the light of day with men and boys to encourage, did they cause a great slaughter among the rodents in the forest.

They were all brown rats—no black rats or tawny rats, but plenty of great rats, small rats, lean rats and brawny rats. In strength they must have numbered several thousands.

An eye-witness states that the army was headed by a gaunt old leader. They pattered and scampered along the Lea Valley-road a dense brown mass. The patterning of their feet and their constant squeals added a terrifying effect to the scene.

They covered the whole of the road. Workmen who were overtaken by them ran aside to safety, and several cyclists turned hastily back from the advancing horde.

The last great exodus of rats occurred in 1899, when owing to the floods hundreds of thousands moved from the City of London into West Sussex. The rats at night on that occasion were so congested that people feared to go out of doors.

Traveling on endless tracks, a motor harrow of German invention can make short turns.
