

Lantic Sugar

THERE is yet time to preserve the autumn fruit for winter enjoyment. LANTIC "Fine" retains all the bouquet of sun-ripened Pears and Peaches. How your folks will enjoy the clear, white delicately-flavoured pears, the rich peaches whole and luscious! LANTIC goodness is more melting, it dissolves at once in the hot syrup without over-cooking.

KEPT HIDDEN IN A CELLAR FOR SEVENTEEN YEARS

JOLIET, ILL., Sept. 13.—State and county authorities are today preparing an investigation to determine persons responsible for the condition of Marie Kidwiska, a cripple, aged nineteen, who, they say, had been kept hidden for seventeen years in the cellar of her home here.

Officials announced that they had learned that the girl was placed in the cellar when she was two years of age. They said she had the physical appearance of a child of six, and her limbs were twisted and shriveled and her face gaunt and discolored. The girl was found in a crib in a corner of the cellar covered with a quilt. The only light came from one small window. Authorities reported that the upper part of the house was clean and comfortable. There are three other children in the family, they said, adding that the girl's step father, Steve Zarn, was a railroad employe.

MIRACLE CURES IN IRISH TOWNS

PILGRIMAGE TO BACKYARD SHRINE IN TIPPERARY

LONDON, Sept. 11.—From opposing the Government, Tipperary's attention has been turned to religion—to belief in miracles.

Templemore, the scene recently of agly conflicts between Sinn Feiners and representatives of the Government, believes itself to have been selected for a Divine manifestation, and is attracting to itself pilgrims from all parts of Ireland.

The immediate objects of their devotions are statues of the Madonna and the Saviour, from the mouths and hearts of which blood is declared to have poured for a whole night and a day. Sacred pictures are also said to have been similarly affected. They are all in the house of a newsagent named Thomas Divan, in whose backyard they have been placed on an improvised shrine, where all who desire to be cured of bodily and mental ills come to pray.

Miraculous cures are said to have been effected.

One young man, named Monahan, who had suffered from a tubercular knee for years, declared that he was cured, and his father publicly broke his crutches in the market square. There were cages, too, of partially blind men who claimed that they could see better after visiting the shrine.

A crippled soldier, who had his leg badly shattered by shrapnel in France, and was three years in hospital, was carried to Divan's home. After praying for some time he got on his feet and walked home without assistance.

A little girl named Cronc, described as being in the last stages of pulmonary tuberculosis, is also declared to have been cured.

Congeaed blood may be seen on the statues, but it may or may not have been placed there by some human agency without the knowledge of Mr. Divan. He tells an amazing story of a dazzling vision seen by him at night, when the manifestations commenced, but the issue of blood has not been seen again.

Many people have accepted every story without question, and have sent their pilgrims hundreds of miles to the backyard shrine.

Sinn Fein Volunteers, armed with heavy sticks, preserve order at Mr. Divan's house. Pilgrims are admitted to the shrine in batches of fifty or so. At the shrine a Volunteer officer, watch in hand, shouts "time, please," when the pilgrims have prayed for a few minutes before the blood-stained statues, and they move off to make room for another batch.

The local priests appear to treat the whole affair with reserve, if not with suspicion, and the parish priest, Father Kiely, was so unmoved by the story that he refused even to go down to the yard to look at the statues.

But all Tipperary believes in the miracle, in spite of the scepticism of its priests.

The Marathon

THE MOST GRUELING OF ALL RACES IN WHICH ATHLETES INDULGE

The Marathon is the most grueling of all races. Athletic tradition holds that no man has in him more than on good Marathon. The strain of winning is so great as to crack the reservoir of inner strength. In the six Olympic contests which preceded that of this year, America, though it has been the winner of every series, has taken only one Marathon. That was in London in 1908, when John F. Hayes of the Irish-American Club of New York city, was declared victor after the Italian, Dorando, collapsed on the stretch.

Dorando tottered into the stadium for ahead of the field. As he came in the gate he should have turned to the left to make a circuit of two-thirds of the track. Instead he turned to the right. The crowd blocked the track ahead of him, and with difficulty turned him about.

He was beyond reasoning. His whole body was trembling. His legs swung as aimlessly as those of a scarecrow. His body pitched forward, and with difficulty was righted. He walked, half trotted a hundred yards and fell. Officials and spectators surrounded him. They gave him stimulants and set him on his feet. He stumbled another 50 yards and fell again. More stimulants were administered, and he was pushed on his way. He made perhaps 100 yards more. He attempted to trot and crumpled on to the cinder path. Official picked him up and carried him across the tape. But on the American protest, Hayes, who finished alone, though barely able to push past the line, was declared the winner.

Every Marathon has left in its wake a little group of athletes who never raced again. But none has ever created such havoc as that at Stockholm in 1912. Of the 75 who entered, fully 70 were said to be suffering from dementia next day, while one was dead and another was fighting desperately for life.

LONDON, Sept. 13.—Following disclosures of the request of Robert Smillie to American miners to strike simultaneously with the British on September 25, the government has challenged the miners to back down or fight. This action by the head of the British coal miners was said to have put the government on the offensive and strengthened its determination to force the issue. The strike is inevitable, according to Sir Robert Horne, President of the Board of Trade.

WORLD'S YOUNGEST BAND LEADER, NOW BARELY FIVE

Raymond S. Baird lays claim to being the youngest orchestra leader in the world. Master Raymond has barely passed the five-year mark. For two weeks he directed an orchestra of forty pieces in Los Angeles, impersonating the band leader Sousa. When he isn't working he lives with his mother in Los Angeles. For his own entertainment Raymond centers his efforts on the saxophone.

GOVERNOR JAMES M. COX.

This is James M. Cox, governor of Ohio, as thousands have seen him during his busy presidential campaign. He has always been a hard worker and this is his working face. The photograph was taken recently at the end of a day during which he had made three speeches, made several hurried automobile trips to keep these engagements and made a luncheon on sandwiches and coffee.

Home Nursing and Health Hints

TAKING CARE OF MOTHER

BY M. JESSIE LEITCH

Julia Ann, just home from college, stood at the door of her mother's bedroom. It was years since her mother had been ill, and now the doctor said she must stay in bed a month.

In the half gloom of the ugly room she saw her mother's outline on the big bed. An absurdly small, shadowy mother she was for such a tall athletic Julia. The girl's heart sank as she crossed to the bed a month in a room like this!

"Julia, dear, I'm that glad to see you," wept the little mother, and the girl put her arms around her, saying eagerly:

"Dearest, I'll take care of you. I used to help in the dorm at school, and I'll love caring for you."

Let's the Sunlight In

Then, fresh from the bright, chintz hung rooms at school, the girl snapped up the shade, let in a stream of dusty sunlight.

Glancing at her mother's high-necked cotton gown, the heavy quilts on the bed, Julia sped away to struggle with her own trunk straps, returning soon to begin the business of caring for her mother.

Later, that afternoon she called her father.

"On the threshold of the bedroom he stood and stared. Gone was the dinginess, the gloom. The red felt lambrequins, with their gold thread embroidery had vanished. The scents and shadows of evening slanted in at the open windows.

"The bed stood near a window. Between white sheets, in a strange ly frivolous garment lay his wife her hair smoothly combed, some pinkwool thing about her bare, thin arms and shoulders.

Scowling Portraits Go Julia laughed at the expression on her father's face as he suddenly missed his scowling ancestral portrait from the wall.

Then she dragged a chair toward him.

"Sit down, dad. I've made beef tea for mother, and I must get her a tray. Sit here and talk to her 'til I come back."

Father and mother, facing each other a little awkwardly in the transformed room, smiled slowly. The old man was the first to speak.

"Aren't you afraid you'll get a chill, mother, in that—?" He paused, while his eyes appraised the lace at her bare throat.

"Julia says you don't catch cold in a cool room if the air is fresh and moving all the time. That's why she has all the windows wide open. And I feel real good tonight. Seems like I can breathe easier. There was a slight of dust in the old carpet. Julie took it away up to the attic, with the pictures. She said the room was cluttered."

Value of Fresh Air Julia Ann appeared just then with a tray upon which a cup of steaming beef tea gleamed the honors with brown, toasted bread and a glass of orange juice.

"I guess college does teach you girls something, after all," conceded her father, moving toward the door.

"It does teach us the value of fresh air, and the dangers of dust, and old carpets and draperies in a sick room," his daughter said, squeezing a pillow behind her mother's back.

"And to take care of mothers," sighed the invalid, happily.

Zbysco Trains For Big Bout

MONTREAL, Sept. 14.—That the very finest physical condition Waldek Zbysco will be in for his meeting here tomorrow night with Joe Stecher, world's champion heavyweight, is certain.

Zbysco—like Stecher—has done, and is doing all his training in the open air. While Stecher has been working on his broad Nebraska farm, Zbysco has been fitting himself at his summer home in Old Orchard, Maine, where he lives practically all the year round.

Zbysco has, for the last month, been working with Calvatore Chevalier in Old Orchard, the big Frenchman, benefitting from the Pole's knowledge of the catch-as-catch-can game, Zbysco, coming to America in moderate circumstances, finally has accumulated enough from the wrestling game to build one of the most elaborate homes in Old Orchard, a well-equipped gymnasium being part of the household. All summer he pits in his time among the rollers on the beach and canoeing, building up his enormous strength and vitality for his winter campaigns.

Zbysco is a Russian Pole by birth, and comes of a family of famous athletes. His grandfather was a wrestler, and had the name of Zbysco bestowed on him by the King of Poland.

His father was a great athlete, but never took up wrestling, and his cousin Stanislaw is one of the greatest in the game. Waldeck started wrestling when he was in his teens, and won the Warsaw tournament while on a school vacation. He owes most of his success to his cousin Stanislaw, who taught him all the finer points of the game.

Other growers' loss is equally complete. There was no loss of life, although several bathers at the beaches were so seriously polluted with hail that they required medical attention.

ST. CATHARINES, Ont., Sept. 14.—Reports this morning from the lake section of Louth and Crantham townships devastated by the terrific wind and hail storm of Saturday indicate that the damage will total at least $400,000. In an area of five miles in length and a half a mile in breadth west of Port Weller, not a farm escaped and in numerous cases the loss is complete.

W. H. Bunting had 1,500 bushels of late tomatoes to pick this week. Today he says he will not be able to get fifty bushels. George Walker says he will not be able to realize $1,000 from his crop which Saturday was worth $11,000.
