Crawling for Penance

A Buddhist priest who has been eight years on the way to Lassa expects to arrive there eight years hence. He started from the north-east of Peking, and when met by an English missionary he had completed over 2,000 miles, about half his journey. He does not walk, he crawls, or, rather, he combines both methods. On his hands he wears boards; on his knees he wears pads. He lies full length upon the ground; then, getting up, walks to where his fingers had reached, then prostrates himself and measures afresh. He is under a self imposed vow and believes that if he crawls in this manner to the Tibetan holy city his sins will be forgiven and honors bestowed upon him by Buddha.

IN LIGHTER VEIN.

The Scot (in confiding mood)—Mon, I've been a reckless young devil in me day. I had a fine chance in life an' wanned it. An auld aunt o' mine an' I had five pounds, an—would you believe it, mon?—I'd blewed the whole lot in seven years!

"I can't understand you, Bridget," said her mistress. "Here I've trotted all over town trying to find a new cook, and now you tell me you'll stay. How did you happen to arrive at this new conclusion?"

"Well, mum," replied Bridget, "I sez when you wer out, 'Biddy, I know you know for the devil ye don't know.' So it's stayin' I'll be, mum."

Cholly (to shopman)—I say—aw—could you take that yellow tie with the pink spots out of the show-window for me?

Shopman—Certainly, sir. Pleased to take anything out of the window any time, sir.

Cholly—Thanks, awfully. The beastly thing bothers me every time I pass. Good morning.—Christian Registerer.

—KNEW IT WAS COMING. Wife (reading letter)—"Well I declare! Here's Jim Brown that I used to know come back from the West with a fortune. Hub—"Well go on! I'm waiting. Wife—"Waiting for what?" Hub—"For you to throw up to me that you might have married him."

FRIENDSHIP IN THE TRENCHES. To illustrate the fact that soldiers of very different social classes, after fighting side by side, often become affectionate friends, the author of "Notes on the War," a Frenchwoman, tells the following story:

"A very jovial young soldier used to entertain his companions most delightfully by his irresistible gaiety. One day his spirits failed. When one of his comrades asked the reason he said:

"In time of peace I am a clown in a music-hall. It's my business to entertain people; but today I got a letter from my wife telling of the illness of our two children. She can't go out to work, and things look black. That's why I can't joke today."

"Some days later the same comrade said: 'You are merry today. What's happened?'"

"Why, a letter from my wife says a man called and handed her three hundred-franc notes from his client, M. Jean Breton; so things are bright again for us! But who can M. Breton be?"

"The other soldier was silent for a moment, but finally said:

"Don't worry, mate! I am Jean Breton. I am rich enough to afford it. Now cheer us with one of your comic songs, please!"

THE WEARY HEART.

Silent she sits, and broods upon her loss, Her heart tormented with the ceaseless "Why?" Thus many a soul is crushed beneath its cross While hope and joy-in-life, un-nourished, die.

Grieving alone through weary hours of night, She knows but sick distaste for all her world. Such sudden darkness has out-thrust the light...

Her life in helpless chaos wrecked and hurled!

Yet all her little kindly acts, forgot Of other, brighter days, are brewing peace—

And every gentle courtesy, unsought, Hath gathered up its manifold increase.

And sweet their message to that aching soul— Deep calls to deep, and they from her may bring

The woman-heart, by sorrow cleansed, and whole.

A treasure for the palace of the King!

HELIGOLAND CALLED BUTTON THAT HOLDS CLOTHES ON KAISER

The Dusseldorfer Generalanzeiger is publishing a series of articles entitled "With the Kaiser at Great Headquarters."

In the series, according to the Rotterdam correspondent, of The London Daily Telegraph, are recorded some extraordinary remarks made by Emperor in conversation at a luncheon at which the writer was present. The Kaiser, whom the correspondent describes as looking remarkably healthy though his hair is quite white, was sitting next to the Chancellor, Herr Michaelis.

The Emperor referred to an article by the correspondent recently, in which, writing about Hindenburg and Ludendorff, he referred to their partnership as being a repetition of what had often occurred in German history—namely, great men coming in couples—mentioning the cases among others of Bismark and Moltke.

The Kaiser turned to Herr Michaelis, saying: "We, too, must grow together organically, like Hindenburg and Ludendorff. Hindenburg is our Wotan, Ludendorff our Siegfried."

The conversation passed on to the Kaiser's recent visit to Heligoland and Hamburg. One of the guests recalled the saying of the African explorer, Stanley, that the exchange of Heligoland for Zanzibar was the exchange of a trouser button for a whole suit of clothes. This prompted the Kaiser to say: "Today, under war conditions this trouser button holds our suit of clothes together. If those who accompanied me were astonished at nothing on the way, every one of them was astonished at this fortress in the sea."

A little later the writer records that the Kaiser, who appeared "painfully moved," exclaimed: "If only during the first twelve years of my government they had not opposed my plans for the fleet! How Eugen Richter opposed poor Hollmann, whose plans he refused as amateurish marine strategy! If only these men knew at sea they would today and for all the future act differently."

DO IT NOW

Rastus and Joe had been accepted by the local board and were talking over the service.

"What you gwine do?" asked Rastus.

"Ise gwine in the infantry. What you gwine?"

"Ise gwine in the cavalry."

"Niggah, don't fine the cavalry; come on wir me in the infantry."

"No suh. They gives you a boss in the cavalry."

"Niggah, when that captain gives the word to retreat, Ah don't want to be troubled with no hoss!"

BOLSHEVIKI, THE FOE OF TRUE FREEDOM.

Perhaps the most ominous word that has tried to horn in on the English dictionary in a long time is that Russian importation "bolsheviki." What it means few people know, but its import is sinister, since it has been applied to the political forces in Russia which seem to favor a separate peace, the flat earth theory and any other lunacy that is repugnant to the average human being among the Allies. It would be rather a free translation to say that "bolsheviki" means democracy; really it means "majority," and those of us who have understood it to signify the rule of the ignorant, superstitious mob have not been far astray. It was first, it was to accept the theory of Mr. A. J. Sack, in the Brooklyn Eagle in 1903, when the Russian Socialist party split, and the majority led by Lenin accepted the name. To define the various shades of belief of the Socialists is no part of the duty of a newspaper that has to issue every 24 hours. It is sufficient for us to know that the Bolsheviki as led by Lenin is as much a foe to which the Allies are fighting for as is Prussian Junkerdom.

No Patriotic Feeling.

Lenine's story has been told before. It has been alleged and denied that he is in the pay of Germany. There can be no doubt that he has been doing Germany's work in Russia and has done it better than Hindenburg, but it seems likely that he has been a volunteer. His record before the war shows that he is a man without patriotic feeling, and there is some ground under the feet of those who have maintained that the average Russian has no particular reason for patriotic feeling. Lenin, at any rate has plenty of class feeling. He is an orthodox Socialist in this respect. He was an exile from the country that gave him birth when the war broke out, and afterwards edited Socialist papers in Switzerland and France. When the Russian revolution flamed forth—and whether he exerted any influence in bringing it about is yet doubtful—he returned, preaching his doctrine and whatever happened to the workingman could get no good out of the war. It was merely a desperate expedient of the capitalist classes to get a firmer grip on the workingman, and that the sooner it stopped the better. In a word Lenin teaches that the foes of the Russian people are not the German people, or even the German armies, but the Russian people of property.

From Socialist to Anarchist.

The war has changed Lenin and his followers remarkably. When Lenin arrived in Petrograd and made his first speech, one of the prominent Russian Socialists told him that the point of view he (Lenine) represents has nothing to do with Socialism, and is a pure expression of Anarchistic ideology. This really describes "Bolshevism" and Bolsheviki as Anarchists—if not in theory, then in their feeling about life and in their political practice. The ground for Anarchism is fertile in Russia, and herein lies the success of the Bolsheviki. The sufferings of all the countries involved in the present conflict are enormous, but probably it is safe to say that, aside from Belgium or Serbia, no country has suffered so much as Russia. To the usual sufferings imposed by the war were added the crime of the old regime. If monarchy in Russia had died twelve years ago, in the first revolution, it would have been a natural death, and both sides would have gained by it. The principle of monarchy and the Czar himself would not have been so hated as now, and on the other hand, the country would not have been poisoned as it now is. The monarchial system, in its practically unlimited form, was dead in Russia long ago, and, decaying, poisoned all the atmosphere around it.

Hunger and Cold.

The old regime, degenerated to such figures as Soukhominoff, Rasputin and Protopopoff, came to an end, leaving the country in a state of such disorganization that no government in the world maybe could have led it through the enormous difficulties better than the Provisional Government did. The disorganization of transportation brought hunger and cold to the Russian cities and created an atmosphere in which every kind of Anarchistic agitation could be successful. Lenin and his followers, with their slogan of immediate peace, with their hatred for the wealthy classes, with their plans for the dictatorship of the laboring class, naturally could appeal more to the suffering, comparatively uneducated Russian masses, already exhausted by the war and the crimes comated visions of Lenin, but he realizes that they can never be reached while Prussianism remains unconquered. The responsibilities of office have done much to cure the fantastic nightmares with which Kerensky used to be troubled and to trouble the country. He has shown a disposition to stand with the military authorities despite his unfortunate difference with Korniloff. The time seems not far distant when he will have to pit his strength against Lenin and the Bolsheviki. In any such contest the allies will have to stand by Kerensky; and there is a good prospect of victory for him and the groups that he is trying to gather round him in opposition to the common foe Anarchy, alias Bolsheviki.

Kerensky Fights Bolsheviki. It is only when one compares him with Lenin that the qualities of Kerensky command respect. One is as much a Socialist as the other, but Kerensky realizes that Socialism will be a mere myth in Russia, if Russia does not do its part in defeating Germany. He sees the new heaven and new earth that appears in the infatu-
