RETROSPECT

Naturally enough, the thoughts of most people in Lent look backward to the events, both public and personal, of the past. Some will cast up, as it were, a balance-sheet setting failures, screw-ups and disappointments against progress, joy, and good fortune, and attempting to find the end to discover which preponderate.

But the view of the man who has learnt to trust and obey God is very different. Whatever of deep sorrow, whatever of radiant happiness the past has brought him, he is conscious of a purpose and a message throughout, and these he is eager to discern. He can see only a little of their full meaning, yet that little gives him profound reassurance. His religion changes his past. He is aware of a divine love and power which have helped him in his darkest hours, and this experience makes him certain that the Friend who has guided him thus far will not fail him in the time to come.

He has gained of seeing all that lies behind in a new light. He is aware of a divine love and power which have helped him in his darkest hours, and this experience makes him certain that the Friend who has guided him thus far will not fail him in the time to come.

The regular monthly devotion and annual meeting of 'Branch B' of St. Paul's Anglican Church was held on Tuesday afternoon, March 5th, at which the president, Mrs. C. H. Coles presided. Following the opening prayer, a portion of scripture was read from Luke 13, was read by Mrs. W. J. Phillips, who also led the members in a hearty and fervent prayer. After routine business had been dispensed with, the members had much pleasure in hearing Mrs. A. B. Cosh, diocesan president, present her report of the annual meeting of the Dominion Executive of the W. A. which was held in the Toronto Diocesan House. Mrs. Cosh pointed out that the theme underlying all the planning of the meeting was the application of the 'Idea' to a large portion of time was taken up in discussing the youth question from the W. A. standpoint. She also referred to two very great highlights, namely, the announcement of increases in church dues and membership. Following the meeting a social hour was enjoyed, being served by a committee of six ladies.

women are! And what budgeting it takes to keep ones home and family neat, and even prosperous looking, on an often uncertain income. It requires one to know well and appreciate the purchasing value of every cent. And if this family of mine did forget a number of really fried doughnuts, guaranteed to assuage any hunger and a fair cake, helped to make the piece of resistance less cold, I can recall now, not that there were many scraps left over but how quickly it all disappeared and James' frequent 'more bread, Ellen' when supplies ran too low.

They went in the dusk, when all I could hear was a babel of voices. There is still no light in the house across the lane, where James has been recently, adding a stick to the old clock on the shelf and reaches out to turn on a favorite Friday evening program. But his mind is not entirely on the music, which streams into the kitchen. I think, after our interview, his busy day, he finds our alone-ness more keenly. 'Ellen' he tells me, 'I hope Jamie comes back with the information and it merely was only a matter of time before the British Treasury information concerning his ranch near Kamloops, B.C.

The charges were laid under defence (financial) regulations. Magistrate H. H. McKenna said, however, there was nothing 'sinister' in the Marquess' failure to supply the information and it merely was unfortunate that the Lord's estate office, to which Treasury correspondence had been addressed, had failed to get the letters attended to.

CONSERVATIVE PEER FINED LONDON, March 7. — (CP Cable) — The Marquess of Exeter, 69-year-old Conservative peer, was fined 25 pounds ($112) and costs of a similar amount, following his conviction today at Bow Street police court of failing to furnish the British Treasury information concerning his ranch near Kamloops, B.C.

IN LOVING MEMORY of LOUISE BENNET MCCREADY (Mrs. J.E.B. McCreedy) on the Anniversary of her Birth March 8.

ELLEN'S DIARY (Continued from Page 2) Jamie remarked running his hand along the animal's back approvingly. We called on the sheep and it was no trouble at all for Jamie to distinguish between 'minnie' and 'thine'. There, James' look in his care then and it was a happy lad, who with James and brown mare and a plied busily between the stables and the compost in the field, if he did complain at dinner that 'it was fat enough away'. He carried sliced turnips to the sheep and, ah, me! hands of crushed grain were set out for the purpose of luring 'sparrow-birds' to the shelter of a shed.

So the month of March came nicely to Alberta. Like a lamb it came, with bluest skies and 'riest' breeze and little frost. Shadows on the pond, where a portion of yesterday's snow had melted. Heat above the ice, might have been summer ones and at evening when our travelers returned the sky was all aglow. The cattle let out to their watering down at the stream, lolling their heads and eating up the slopes, as if loath to come back to the confines of their stables in the afternoon's twilight. Jamie's feathered flock, allowed to range, foraged about the barnyard, led by brown-necked, burled-shouldered bird, who strutted ahead and announced any find, with suitable gestures and in a dignified voice, that reminded one of Spring days. I saw Jamie pause in the yard to regard Mattie, the Muscovy duck, the black and white of her and with curious head, perched on a fence, nonchalantly sunning herself. For a few seconds, he observed this always fascinating and uncanny bird, before there was a noise and a loud chuckle from Jamie. 'She flewed' and 'filling' the line of her flight, across the barnyard 'just like the wild ducks by our bridge, when Mattie scatters them!'

Karoly said 'there was a great crowd' in the city today, encouraged doubtless in their going by the fine day, as she herself had been. She, of course, has her own folk there, which is one of the delights of her trips. At night, then every one of our three had an enjoyable day. Rob beamed as he showed out a new tire, a faithful car-of-sorts, proof enough that this vehicle is still tight and ready to go. There are, as yet, likely some pieces of harness; some breeching straps or possibly 'extra' for a brace or snaps or 'rhose ruffs' so to be in readiness for the days ahead. Neither did Karoly display any of her belongings, which after all takes a remarkably brave woman to do when a mother-in-law is one audience, what marvelous financiers, the majority of farm Fashion Horoscope by Colette. Illustration of two women in fashion. Text: 'If out-of-bounds bust—Don't Don't emphasize size in light top. Do wear dark blouse, light skirt.' Chicago Sun Syndicate.

True friend of the teen-ager who develops in early teens, is the simple bodice with flirty feminine skirt. Preferably dark bodice. That floating, drift of chiffon or net skirt will spell romance as you dance and you spin pose and self-assurance because it doesn't accentuate bust lines. Don't reverse this color camouflage—light bodice calls attention to bosoms.
