OTTAWA, Sept. 20—Everett W. Hogan, superintendent of Canada's reindeer herds in the Western Arctic and widely known figure throughout the Northwest, died yesterday in Edmonton.

He was a brother of Douglas L. Hogan and Lt. Col. J. H. Hogan, both of Ottawa. Other survivors are a brother, Austin and a sister, Mrs. J. A. Murphy, both of Emerald, Prince Edward Island.

His death ended a varied and active career in Canada, the United States and Mexico.

Known as "Pat" Hogan throughout the Northwest, he was associated with the Canadian Government's experimental reindeer project from its early stages and was made superintendent of the herds in 1944.

By that time, the reindeer, which were to revolutionize the living habits of the Arctic Eskimos had risen from 2,370 head to more than 7,000.

In addition to herding the deer through 10,000 square miles of territory at the Mackenzie River mouth protecting them from the ravages of wolves, there was the added duty of training the nomadic Eskimos as herdsmen rather than hunters.

Mr. Hogan was born at Hope River, Prince Edward Island, in 1885.

After attending Truro Agricultural College he graduated from Ontario Agricultural College at Guelph in 1916 with the degree of Bachelor of Scientific Agriculture.

He was engaged by the British Columbia Department of Agriculture as a soil and crop instructor.

He later took over the management of a private ranch in Mexico until operations were suspended in 1944, where he remained until his illness a year ago.

The funeral will be held in Edmonton on Wednesday.
