Are You Keeping Pace With the Growth of Canada?

As Canada grows—so real-estate values in her leading cities grow.

In 1921 Montreal had a total population of a little over 700,000. The 1927 census showed an aggregate population of 1,072,700. It is well within the realm of possibility that the present population will double in the next ten years.

Well located real estate in the metropolis of Montreal will grow proportionately.

Help Appreciated to Aid Church

A correspondent writes:—A little church owed the Bank some money. They had no funds. They met the amount when due. Here's how:

They put on a Concert and lacking sufficient talent to put it on alone, called to their aid friends from a near by community who responded most heartily. The result was success, brilliant and effectual. The money to meet the note in full was realized.

The above is the story in brief of how the Dundas and Elliotvale folk assisted the St. Peters Baptist Church to meet an obligation. The concert programme was a delightful succession of ear-tickling harmony, both instrumental and vocal.

We expected great things from our old familiar Dick Burdette and we wish to inform all the world who were not present, that our great expectations were fulfilled to the utmost for Dick excelled himself and kept us laughing so boisterously throughout his many responses to encores that we lacked for breath The Dundas quartette sang beautifully and solefully in several numbers. Mrs. Wadman sang several solos with trained excellence, accompanied by Mrs. Frank Clay who also played for the quartette with consummate skill. Mr. Pearl Brothers played first violin to a stringed orchestra composed in addition to himself of Miss Mary Campbell on the Mandolin, and Mr. Lloyd Anderson on the violin, and accompanied on the organ by Mrs. Brothers. The grateful tribute of tramping feet testified to the delight with which their music was received. The St. Peters boys and girls were splendid in three different sketches.

But, and after that three other buts, we did not know what to expect from the stranger, Mr. William Butler, who came over from England and settled on one of our farms a year or so ago. We heard he could sing and play a little, and we included him in the invitation for help. Well, friends who were not present, we wish to impress on you very emphatically the fact that you missed something. Can Butler sing? We'll tell the bumble bees he can. Can Butler fiddle? The first time you hear him ask your feet. He sang for his first number "Sailor Beware." We and some others who were present, heard this song in "Dumbells" by a world-famous singer and we were agreed that Mr. Butler sang this song as well which is high praise. He used a selection of Irish melodies for his first number on the violin, and was accompanied perfectly by Miss Helen Burdette. Both vocally and instrumentally his versatility was emphasized by the distinct variety of encores. He was called out again and again by hearers, frantic with delight, till we had to beg them to desist.

We have on more item on the programme to mention, and while last mentioned is far from least appreciated. This was dancing by two little girls; the Charleston was demonstrated energetically and in splendid time by "little wee" Ella Mullin age five, and "tiny" Lillian Macdonald gave a wonderful exhibition of old time step dancing in perfect accord to the music of the fiddle masterly rendered by Inspector D. J. Mullin.

A few pies were sold during an intermission in the program and brought splendid prices. During this intermission Dick Burdette got some valuable information at his own request with regard to the probable price of December Roosters.

After the program had ended by the singing of the National Anthem all who took part were invited to the little church where a nice hot supper had been prepared by the ladies of the St. Peter's Baptist Church. A nice sociable time was enjoyed for an hour after which the friends who had helped us so purposefully were driven to their homes in cars supplied by the members of the Church.

FRANCIS-BERNARD NUPTIALS —A wedding of much interest took place in Saint Lawrence Church, Morell, Tuesday, October 23rd, when Mary Agnes, daughter of Simon Francis, became the bride of Patrick Bernard of Grand River. The bride was dressed in a gown of French beige flat crepe and was attended by her sister, Mary Elizabeth, who was also most becomingly attired in robin blue georgette. The groom was supported by Mr. Charles Francis, uncle of the bride. After the ceremony the bridal party motored to Charlottetown, returning in the evening to the home of the bride, where a large number of guests awaited them. During the evening violin music was furnished by Messrs Gus Nicholas, Peter Scully and Joe Mitchell. Special mention must be made of the songs furnished by the notable singer, Mr. William Connolly. Supper was then served to over one hundred guests, after which all departed to their homes, after enjoying a most sociable evening.

UNCLE RAY'S CORNER

WAYS OF THE PELICANS

Large Fishes of the sea feed on smaller ones, so it's up to the smaller ones to keep out of the way. Very often they try to do so by swimming to shallow water. When the tide comes in, they come in with it.

The little fish, in their turn, are looking for something to eat. Their chief game is made up of insects, and they find good meals in the shallow tide waters. But, alas! The small fish meet their Waterloo when they meet a flock of pelicans.

Pelicans have learned that tide waters bring them food, and they are ready to take care of the fish. In their huge bills, they gobble up many a citizen of the ocean who "wasn't doin' anything, except chasin' insects."

Those pelicans bills attract our eyes first of all. They are clumsy looking affairs, and range in length from 10 to 16 inches. Beneath the bill is a pouch which can hold a big load. Fish after fish is stored there, awaiting the time to go to the final Happy Hunting Grounds.

If pelicans did not have such queer bills and pouches, they would be rather good looking. As it is, they make a graceful sight when flying in a flock. Their wings are strong, and they are powerful flyers. Some of them measure eight feet from wing-tip to wing-tip.

Pelicans are most often seen along the Gulf coast, though there are some which range the shores of both the Atlantic and the Pacific. Many pelicans fly inland during the spring nesting season.

The American pelican is mainly white, but sometimes he has pink, yellow or purplish feathers. This bird is not a good diver because of the air bubbles beneath this plumage which keep him above water almost like a cork. Another member of the family, the brown pelican, is not held up in that manner and shows skill at plunging for food.

GIVES HIS BLOOD FREE

(By British United Press)

LONDON, October, 26.—The fact that most of the London Hospitals keep a register of persons in a critical condition gives interest to a story from Paris.

An employee at the Paris Central Markets, Raymond Briez, has, it is believed, established a world's record as a "blood-giver", for he has just for the 264th time given a quarter of a litre of his blood to save the life of a hospital patient.

In three years he has given 117 pints of blood for transfusion operations, and, in no way enfeebled by his repeated sacrifices, is quite prepared to continue. Briez, who is 30 years of age, is a most valuable aid to medical science, for it is found that his blood is suitable for transfusion to patients of all ages and temperaments, and furthermore he produces it in astonishing quantities. During July last year he submitted to four transfusion operations in twenty six hours with no more ill effects than a temporary tired feeling.

In the case of poor patients he steadfastly refuses to accept any rewards whatever for his priceless gift, and often loses money as well as blood because he is frequently obliged to leave his work in order to obey the doctor's summons to the bedside of a patient.

DECLARES EFFORTS TO SPEAK TO MARS FUTILE

WASHINGTON, Oct. 27.—Efforts to communicate by radio with the planet Mars were described today as "futile" by Dr. J. H. Dellinger, chief engineer of the federal radio commission.

"Extensive experiments in past years by the United States bureau of standards and other scientific bodies, have conclusively demonstrated the impossibility of such communication either with Mars or other planets," Dellinger said.

The radio engineer explained that the "radio ceiling" was about 100 miles above the earth and it would be impossible for radio waves to go further into the ether.

"High frequency waves, when broadcast, shoot up to the ceiling with the speed of light and are quickly bounced back again to earth," he said.

This explains the phenomenon of "fading" noticeable in night broadcasting, he said.

His friends will be glad to hear that Mr. R. H. Jenkins, M. P., has almost completely recovered from blood poisoning in his hand.
