TUESDAY, JULY 2, 1912

A WORD FOR THE HOMELAND.

In the course of an after-dinner speech in Montreal, the other day, one of the British capitalists now touring Canada, incidentally remarked, "We can supply you with any goods you require and we think we can make the goods better than any other country on this globe."

The remark is characteristically British. It is an expression of the Englishman's faith in his country, of that faith in country and fellow-countryman that has made Britain the greatest nation in the world of that faith without which neither a nation nor an individual can become really great.

In Prince Edward Island we are denouncing "the tragedy of the census." Our population is leaving us at the rate of more than a thousand a year. To account for this discouraging exodus we gibbly and persistently enumerate, one by one, the various grievances under which we labor and charge each in turn with being a contributing cause of the exodus. On the reasons for "getting away from it all" we dwell eloquently and learnedly, on the reasons for remaining, the reasons why we should prefer Prince Edward Island to any other part of Canada we are silent. We need more of the British spirit which can say proudly "We can make the goods better than any other country on this globe." And this would be no idle boast.

Prince Edward Island is mainly an agricultural country. Its business is almost exclusively farming. And as such, in climate soil and natural productiveness it is second to no other country in the world. Its very isolation, about which complaint is so often made, is an advantage, making it possible to institute a system of inspection of its imports and exports which would guard against the introduction of diseased animals and impure seeds, or the export of products the quality of which might injure the fair name of our province.

The praises of our island province are sung too grudgingly, and yet above the discordant chorus of political partizanship and of fault-finding this one note should ring strong and true.

On questions of trade and commerce, of tariffs and foreign relationships there may be conscientious differences of opinion, but on our loyalty to our own province and our duty to it there should be, and there really is, perfect harmony. The trouble is that the harmony is drowned in the discord of the larger noises.

Let us be true to our own province. Instead of dwelling upon our grievances and wasting valuable time on petty differences let us emphasize our advantages and our privileges for they are very many and very great. On this all can agree, and with press and people unitedly boost the province we shall be able not only to stem the tide of emigration but to turn it backward and so build up for ourselves a country populous in proportion to its natural advantages and rich in proportion to the unitedness and self-helpfulness of its people.

A NOTABLE COMPANY.

The award by the Royal Society of Arts of its Albert Medal to Lord Strathcona puts Canada's high commissioner in London into a notable company. The special service on Lord Strathcona's part which it was intended to recognize and commemorate was in the way of improving the railway communications, developing the resources and promoting the commerce and industry of Canada and other parts of the British Empire. The medal has been given yearly since 1864, when Sir Rowland Hill, the father of penny postage, was the recipient. In 1865 it went to Napoleon III, then, to outward seeming, firmly seated on the imperial throne of France, "for distinguished merit in promoting by his personal exertions the international progress of arts, manufactures, and commerce." Michael Faraday and Charles Wheatstone were in the following years rewarded with the medal for their research and work in the fields of natural science and electricity. Joseph Whitworth received one for his invention and manufacture of instruments of measurement and uniform standards, which aided in the perfection of machinery and industrial development. Justus von Liebig was honored for his work in the development of food economy and agriculture, Ferdinand de Lesseps for his services to commerce in connection with the construction of the Suez Canal, and Henry Bessemer and C. W. Siemens for discoveries in the field of metallurgy. Michael Eugene Chevreul, who lived to the age of 103 years, and Jean Baptist Dumas, two noted French chemists, are on the list, as are also George B. Airy, the astronomer, William Armstrong, the inventor and engineer; William Thomson (Lord Kelvin), the electrical discoverer and inventor and developer of cable telegraphy; Louis Pasteur, chemist and student of the diseases of animals; James Buchanan Baid, who compels the Mississippi to keep clear its own channels to the Gulf of Mexico; Henry Doulton, who gave art a new recognition in the making of pottery; William Henry Perkin, who developed the art of obtaining dyes from coal tar; Frederick Abel, who applied chemical science to

GRANDMOTHERS USED SAGE TEA

To Darken the Hair and Restore Gray and Faded Hair to Its Natural Color

It is easier to preserve the color of the hair than to restore it, although it is possible to do both. Our grandmothers understood the secret. They made a "sage tea" and their dark, glossy hair long after middle life was due to this fact. Our mothers have gray hairs before they are fifty, but they are beginning to appreciate the wisdom of our grandmothers in using following suit. "Sage tea" for their hair and fast advantage of the past in that it can get a ready-to-use preparation called Weyth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy. As a scalp tonic and color restorer this preparation is vastly superior to the ordinary "sage tea" made by our grandmothers. The growth and beauty of the hair depends on a healthy condition of the scalp. Weyth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy quickly kills the dandruff germs which rob the hair of its life, color and lustre, makes the scalp clean and healthy, gives the hair strength, color and beauty, and makes it grow.

the manufacture of iron and steel; and Thomas Alva Edison, the master of electricity, are also of the number whom the society held to be worthy of honor. John Bennet Lawes and Henry Gilbert were rewarded with a medal for their services at Rothamsted in aid of advanced agriculture, and Joseph Lister for his discovery and establishment of the antiseptic method of treating wounds and injuries, to the saving of tens of thousands of lives. Robert Wilhelm Bunsen got one for his application of chemistry to arts and manufactures, as also did William Crookes, Alexander Graham Bell got one for his invention of the telephone, and Lord Rayleigh one for his application of scientific knowledge to industrial arts. Joseph Wilson Swan was rewarded for his work in connection with the incandescent electric lamp, and Andrew Noble, for his study of explosives. One medal went to Madame Curie for her work in the discovery of radium, and one to Charles Algernon Parsons, for his development of the turbine engine. Besides Napoleon III, two monarchs, Queen Victoria and Edward VII, were awarded medals, in each case because of their interest in the cause of art and industry. The amount of accomplishment suggested by such a list can hardly be comprehended by the ordinary reader. It is more remarkable also because all of the names mentioned belonged to persons who lived and worked within the memory or life of many who are as yet but middle aged. It may be conceded also, remarks the Montreal Gazette, that the enterprises with which Lord Strathcona's name has been connected give him a right to be in the notable company.

"HAVE you Tuckett's Cigarettes?"

"Yes, sir, what kind?"

"Club Virginias, please. May seem like a strange thing, but nearly all you tobacco men keep Tuckett's, and what's more, you never seem to offer substitutes for them."

"Is that so? Well, I guess 'twould be 'bout as much as our trade is worth. Customers as a rule know what they want, and ask for it by name. Personally, I know the Tuckett line is O.K. Handled it, in fact, ever since I went into business. They put real quality in their cigarettes, and I tell you there's nothing like quality after all to please people and make them steady customers."
