Minard's Liniment Co., Limited.

Gentlemen,—Ever since coming home from the Boer war I have been bothered with running fever sores on my legs. I tried many salves and ointments. Also doctoring continually for the blood, but got no permanent relief. Till last winter when my mother got me to try MINARD'S LINIMENT. The effect of which was almost magical. After two bottles the sores completely disappeared and I have worked every working day since.

THE WOMAN HE MARRIED

BY JANE PHELPS

NAN FINDS THAT MOVING COSTS

Chapter 32.

Long before I was settled I found that Clara had been perfectly right about things not fitting—that what had seemed right when I thought of the new apartment, suddenly appeared not at all suitable, or could not be used, because of difference in size of windows, rooms, and so on.

It was maddening, yet I said nothing to Dick. I would wait until I had done the best I could with what we had, then I would insist upon an account being opened at one of the large department stores where I could find almost everything we would need.

Clara Watson had been a dear helping me all she could and keeping Junior for hours at a time. I worked very hard to get things in shape quickly, and Dick helped me in the evenings, so it wasn't long before we were living regularly again.

But the worried look had not left Dick's face. I caught him figuring several times, so was not surprised when he said:

"I'm afraid we have bit off more than we can chew, Nan. That $5 extra every month on the rent, the cost of moving, and what things we seem to be obliged to get, will keep us pretty well cramped. I wish we had stayed in the old place another year."

"Well, I don't! And I don't see why you talk like that. Other men not as clever as you are, with half your education, make money enough to keep their families decently. I can't see why you don't. I bet you could if you tried. There must be chances to make money where you are."

I knew absolutely nothing of business of any sort. A cotton broker meant nothing more to me at this time than a grocer. Business was business—a place where man earned money.

"Oh, Nan! One would think to hear you talk that I didn't try. I get discouraged, dear, when it looks as if I couldn't make ends meet, and yet you know you are unhappy."

"Goochie I am not unhappy. You can't blame me for wanting pretty clothes and a nice home, can you?" "Do you still care as much for me as you did?" He asked the question so seriously I was startled.

"Of course I do! I never see a man whom I think is half as nice or good looking or anything as you are!" I declared, kissing him. "And you know it! What in the world made you ask such a question, and in that tone?" I meant all I said. I did love Dick. I never had given a thought to another man.

"Oh, I have feared you didn't, that's all." "Silly!" I kissed him again. But I changed the conversation. I didn't want to talk about our finances when he was in such a mood. He was apt to make me say I didn't want things when I did. And I had too many plans in my head to make foolish promises.

The very next day after this talk with Dick, Mildred Stowell called me up and said she was going to her dressmaker's that afternoon and wanted me to go with her.

"I will call for you about 2.30," she said. "Make yourself look as pretty as you know how. There is another fashion parade, and there will be a lot of people there I know."

"But I—" "No excuse please, dear. I shan't accept them. I'll be after you promptly at 2.30."

It was then about 11 o'clock. I called Mrs. Dooly on the telephone but she couldn't come over. It was quite different, she said, now that we did not live in the same house. She had to dress for the street every time she came to me and it took too much of her time.

When I got home. I put on the best I owned, a very simple little dark blue tailored suit, and the hat I had bought with the money that remained after I had paid the tradesmen, so many weeks ago—the money Mildred Stowell had given me.

The hat was very becoming, and when I had put on the nice veil I had bought that day I shopped with Clara—the one I charged to her—I had to be satisfied. It was the best I could do.

"You look very chic," Mildred greeted me. "That's a love of a hat."

THE CHRISTMAS SPIRIT

Over the world with outspread wings, The Spirit of Christmas broods and stings Of happy, hopeful, helpful things All for you and me! Charity, wide and deep and high, Love, that reaches from earth to sky, Peace, that close to the heart doth lie— All these gifts are free.

Queen Alexandra's seventy-sixth birthday was greatly celebrated on December 1st in the royal family circle which comprised an unusual number of relatives. All the queen's Mother's living children, including the Queen of Norway, were at Marlborough House to present their congratulations personally.

Of Alexandra's grandchildren only Prince George, Prince Arthur of Connaught, and Prince Olaf are away and while her only great grandchild, the Earl of MacDuff, is in South Africa, the visit of the King of Denmark and Prince Waldemar adds two nephews to the circle. Prince Waldemar of Denmark is accompanied by his only daughter Princess Margaret and in court quarters it is generally believed that Queen Alexandra has set her heart on the possibilities of a match between this pretty and vivacious girl and the Prince of Wales. Princess Margaret is 25 and "quite English" in her dress and appearance and ways. During the war she nursed in a hospital in Yorkshire. Nothing has been said in the London press on the subject or after the blunder made by one paper some months ago in suggesting that the Prince of Wales should choose an English bride it has been generally agreed that public discussion of the matter, which is chiefly the young man's personal concern, should be avoided.

In court circles however, it has been known for some time that Princess Margaret would accompany her father to England on his visit for Queen Alexandra's birthday and the possible developments have been interestingly discussed.

There is a stir in the air that announces the approach of Christmas. The different stores are thronged daily with eager shoppers, old and young, sharing secrets that only a Christmas season can bring. All ready entertainments are being planned for the week immediately following Christmas Day when the students from the different Colleges will be home, and already at least three dances are arranged for New Year's eve. The holiday season promises to be the gayest in years.

Everybody was out in force on Thursday afternoon to attend the tea and sale of fancy articles in aid of the Protestant Orphanage which was held in the Market Building. It was the biggest affair of its kind in years, the tea tables being crowded until a late hour, but there was abundance for all. It is understood upwards of $1,000 was realized.

Major L. W. Gill, M. Sc. who was here to open the Technical College was cordially welcomed by relatives and friends.

Miss Della E. Saunders is being congratulated on her appointment as Supt. of the Homemakers' Clubs in the Province of Quebec, which was made public this week. Miss Saunders' departure from this city is much regretted as she has made a wide circle of friends here while supervisor of Women's Institutes in this Province.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Plummer Hill, Montreal have disposed of their home in Macgregor street and are now en route for California, where they will spend the winter and in the spring they will go to Vancouver, where they will take up residence.

Miss Emma Nicholson is visiting for a few days with friends in Amherst.

Mrs. Russel Sterns who has been visiting her mother Mrs. (Senator) Ferguson, Marshfield, left Wednesday for her home in Ingoquois Falls. After Christmas Mrs. Ferguson will go to Winnipeg to spend the winter with her son, Mr. Colin Ferguson.

Mrs. Norman Lowther held her first reception yesterday afternoon and looked very pretty as she welcomed her callers assisted by her mother, Mrs. Davies and the groom's mother Mrs. Lowther of Kensington. In the tea room, Mrs. W. T. Huggan and Mrs. E. Bruce Huggan poured tea, assisted by Mrs. H. H. Horne, Mrs. H. L. Bethune, Misses Florence Lantz, Dora McDonald, Virginia Boyer, Jean McMillan and Dorothy Davies.

There was the usual round of one two and three table Bridges this week, but generally speaking everybody was too busy with the big tea and Christmas work to spend much time over cards.

Mrs. B. W. LePage is leaving this morning on a visit to Boston.

Friends in Charlottetown will be interested to learn that the marriage of Miss Bessie M. Babbitt, daughter of the late Mr. T. D. Babbitt, of Fredericton, to Mr. Harry E. Lodge of Moncton, son of the late Rev. W. W. Lodge, formerly of this city, will take place this month.

When is Music, Music?

By Gregory Mainwaring

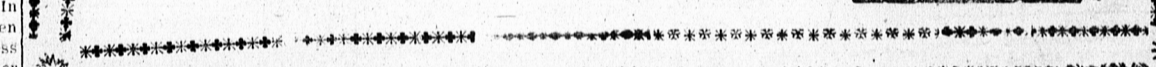

UNDERSTAND music. Then you'll understand phonographs. Music is not merely sound. Music is not merely harmony. Music is not merely rhythm.

Music is a flooding, mysterious power. It is generated by a dynamo—the artist's soul, his imagination, his personality. It is the expression of his feelings. It exists not so much in sounds—but in the accents which his feelings give those sounds—in what is called tone-color.

That is why the New Edison matches its RE-CREATION of an artist's voice directly against that artist's living voice, and no one can tell one from the other.

Two million people have heard the New Edison in these voice-comparisons. Its triumphant performances have been recorded by the music critics of 500 newspapers. Come into our store, and find out for yourself how Edison has RE-CREATED the soul, the feeling, the electric spark of emotion in music.
