MILK CRUST

When our baby boy was three months old, he had the milk crust very badly on his head, so that all the hair came out, and itched so bad, he made it bleed by scratching it. I got a cake of CUTICURA SOAP and a box of CUTICURA Ointment. I applied the CUTICURA and put a little cap on his head, and before I had used half a box it was entirely cured, and his hair commenced to grow out nicely.

A MOTHER HAPPY

Hobson Meets Her First Time

SINCE COMING HOME

After His Famous Achievement at Lithia Springs, Georgia—A Red Letter for the Guests of the Fashionable Summer Resort Hotel.

ATLANTA, Aug. 3.—The long deferred meeting between Lieut Hobson and his mother occurred at Lithia Springs, twenty miles from here, at 6.20 o'clock this morning.

Lieut Hobson arrived in Atlanta from Asheville at 5.10 A.M. Only a small gathering was in the passenger depot at the time, and Hobson, attired in a brown sack suit, pushed his way through unrecognized until he encountered a friend, M J Donnelly, whose greeting soon betrayed his visitor's identity to the rapidly increasing throng about the waiting-room. As soon as it became known that it was really "Mer-rimac" Hobson the young officer was almost suffocated by the pressure of the crowd to shake his hand.

While he was making his way to the ticket office a party consisting of Mr and Mrs J N Moody, Miss Agatha Sheehan and Miss Julia McKinley, all relatives or intimate friends, approached him, and he was at once subjected to such flattering attention from the ladies that he was manifestly embarrassed. He was finally permitted to get his ticket and board the train for Lithia.

On the trip of twenty miles he was the cynosure of all eyes, and before the train had left the city five miles in its rear every lady in the party had secured his autograph and almost talked him into helplessness with a running fire of questions and comments on his achievement. He had been joined on the train at Atlanta by his brother, Joseph Hobson, of this city, and the two enjoyed as much of a family tete-a-tete as the curious crowd would permit. But the climax of the occasion was reserved for the arrival at Lithia.

A long, narrow platform runs along the track at Lithia Springs, and here had congregated the bulk of the guests of the Sweetwater Park Hotel, one of the most fashionable hostleries of the Georgia summer resorts. Lieut Hobson alighted from the rear end of his car, while the watchers were expecting him from the other end. As he stepped off the platform a diminutive, thin-faced, eager-mannered lady who had been in the centre of the group of guests, ran half way to meet him, and the next moment was folded in the arms of the broad-breasted young man. It was his overjoyed mother. The crowd stood respectfully aloof while Hobson pressed his lips to his mother's forehead, while she, with her head on his breast, wept tears of joy. There were a few murmured words of affection and then the couple turned toward the assembled friends, and the mother presented the Lieut to the friends whom she had made during her stay in Lithia. Lieut Hobson had a cordial word and handshake for every one introduced to him, and then the little party moved slowly up the lane to the big hotel.

Here again the officer encountered an obstacle in the shape of the guests of the hotel who had been unable to meet the train. The hotel had been tastefully decorated for the occasion. A wreath of laurel hanging over the entrance was twined around a floral device worked into the word "Welcome."

For only a few minutes mother and son mingled with those in the corridors, and then the lieutenant was escorted to the second floor, where a room next his mother's had been assigned to him. There they sat and talked until they were summoned below by the breakfast bell.

The table at which the Hobsons breakfasted was festooned with rare flowers, so compactly arranged as to almost screen the family group from view. At the end of the repast the flowers were removed to the officer's apartments.

Most of the morning was spent by Lieut Hobson in telling his mother over again the story of the perils through which he had passed, touching very lightly on the magnificent reception which had everywhere been accorded him.

Lieut Hobson will come to Atlanta tomorrow afternoon and drive to Fort McPherson with his mother. In the evening there will be a reception at the Executive Mansion under the auspices of the Army and Navy Relief Association. Wednesday he will leave for New York, accompanied by his mother to preside Thursday night at the meeting of the sailors and Soldiers' Relief Association.

Wolves on the Stock Ranges

Deadwood, S.D., Aug. 2.—Unless some method is discovered soon to exterminate the wolves on the Back Hills ranges stockmen will be compelled to either go out of the business or move their herds to a country where wolves do not exist. The same condition exists in the west.

Part of North Dakota, eastern Wyoming, and Montana, in parts of Colorado and in New Mexico and Texas. Stockmen estimate that each wolf during the year will do $1000 damage to a herd of cattle, and this loss is the greatest that befalls the stockman. One cattle owner in Butte County reports having lost forty-head of steers last season by wolves. Old cattlemen are of the opinion that there is but one way to exterminate them, and that is by concerted action of the States and counties in making wolf hunting a profitable business. By placing a bounty of $10 upon every wolf and paying the amount in cash and not in long-time warrants, and by having every county in all of the States join in the business, it is thought there would be quick work made of the animals.

The same bounty should be placed on old and young, male and female alike. When a discrimination is made in the age of wolf hunters are apt to rear the young pups by hand until they are old enough to receive full bounty. More care should be taken by the officers whose duty it is to check up the scalps and see that no fraud is perpetrated. Often coyote scalps are palmed off for wolf. There are several methods used by professional wolf hunters to capture the animals. The use of hounds is becoming common, but it is expensive, and dogs can only be used in an open country. A good pack of fifteen hounds would eat a beef every two weeks for food. Using poison is another common method, and in a new country it is considered the cheapest and most effective, but the wolves soon become suspicious and avoid the doctored bait. There are those who believe that wolves have an antidote, some kind of a weed which they eat when they are poisoned. When using poison there is great risk that dogs, cattle, horses, and other domestic animals may eat of the poison bait with serious results. Digging out the young is practiced by many hunters. When a den can be located it means a good sum for the hunter in bounty money. Trapping is used as commonly as any method, and is probably as successful as any. An old hunter makes the statement that when the bounty is made large enough professional wolf hunters will find a way of exterminating the animals. Coyotes do not do much damage except to sheep and barn fowl. The usual bounty for them is from 50 cents to $1. As a rule stockmen would prefer not to have the coyotes entirely killed off. It has been the history of other countries that as soon as they are exterminated jack rabbits, gophers, and prairie dogs increase at an astonishing rate, and become greater nuisances and do more real damage than the coyotes. Cattlemen are becoming serious in the matter of exterminating the wolves, and meetings are being called all over the country to consider the question.—St. Paul Globe.

AN OPEN CONFLICT FEARED.

England and Russia May Yet Measure Swords. LONDON, August 5.—(Special)—There is great uneasiness because of the Chinese situation between England and Russia and an open conflict is feared because of Russia's open opposition to British commercial possessions which Salisbury's weakness has permitted.

The Prince of Wales is taking great interest in America's cup challenge, and expects it will do much to cement friendly feeling between the nations.

THE PRINCE OF WALES

Goes a Yachting by Reluctant Consent. LONDON, Aug. 2.—The World correspondent can state on the best authority that the Prince of Wales's removal from London to Cowes on the royal yacht Osborne was sanctioned with much reluctance by the physicians, and only as being the lesser of two evils.

Since the season has ended and all Prince has grown extremely restive of his cronies have gone from town the under his enforced confinement. His doctors decided therefore to take the risk of the journey regarding his recovery rather than the practical certainty that he would worry himself into illness if forced to stay in town.

The truth is, as The World is now in a position to affirm during the first four days after the accident acute apprehension was felt by the physicians that tetanus might supervene. On the following Wednesday premonitory symptoms appeared, and four consultations of his doctors were held that day, though only two were announced. The fear of tetanus, coupled with the gouty condition of the Prince's knee-joint, was the real reason why no operation was performed to bring the fractured parts of the patella together.

The Prince is aware that he is fated to have a weak knee for life, but the doctors assured him yesterday that if the progress already made continues and he does not insist on using his leg too soon there is every prospect that no lameness will be observable while walking; but he will always have difficulty in going up and down stairs, and he can scarcely hope to take horse exercise any more, while dancing will be impossible for him. This latter deprivation he feels acutely, as he is an enthusiastic dancer. On the night before his accident a dance was got up among the party at Waddesdon at his suggestion, at which he showed more vigor than the youngest men present.

He is holding his doctors to their original over-sanguine statement that he will be able to get about in two months, and on that ground he has refused to cancel his engagement to attend the Austrian Emperor's jubilee in Vienna in November. He says his doctors must patch him up somehow for that function.

Altogether, his doctor's lot is not a happy one, as the Prince is proving a fidgety and exacting patient.

HONG KONG, Aug. 5.—(Special)—The Philippine insurgents leader writing consul Wildman says his present course is because America does not let him know whether he is fighting for annexation protection or independence. MANILA, Aug. 5.—(Special)—Aguinaldo has asked General Merritt to permit the native troops to march through the streets of Manila when it surrenders and has suggested the formation of native regiments with American officers. The Americans now occupy trenches dug by insurgents close under the city.

MADRID, August 5.—(Special)—Col. San Martin, who abandoned Ponce, Porto Rico, without resistance, has been court martialled and shot.

Col Ruiz, second in command, succeeded.
