A Morning Smile

Willie (studying Sunday School lesson)—Pa, what does "original sin" mean?
Father—It's just another way of saying, my son, that if we follow our natural bent we become crooked.

BAKED OYSTER POTATOES

Before bringing out the potato open scoop out a space in each side large enough to hold one or two small oysters. Season with a little salt and butter and tie in cheesecloth, or stick the pieces together with large toothpick. Brush outside of potato with a little oil. Place in a baking dish with barely enough water to cover the bottom of dish and bake in a moderate oven (350 degrees) one hour.

It is better to see clearly one or two things in life than to move confused and blinded in the dust of an impotent activity.

NOW HAS FIVE CHILDREN

WHEN I was first married I had a miscarriage and felt perfectly miserable. I took three bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and later gave birth to a fine baby boy. I now have five children. I always take the Vegetable Compound during pregnancy and it helps me. It benefits my sisters-in-law too." Mrs. W. J. Zinston, R. R. No. 2, Lakefield, Ontario.

Lists Five More Rules for Wives Dorothy Dix How to Make a Happy Marriage

To be a Happy Wife, Avoid the In-Laws on Both Sides; Be Tactful; Avoid Argument; Make a Cheerful and a Comfortable Home; Remember That a Compliment a Day Keeps the Divorce Lawyer Away

IF A WOMAN WANTS TO BE HAPPY THOUGH MARRIED (Continued From Monday)

Sixth. She must establish her own home as far removed as possible from the sphere of influence of in-laws. Don't go to live with your husband's family and don't have yours come to live with you unless you are out hunting for trouble, which you are sure to find. It is inevitable that every bridal couple while going through the difficult process of adjusting themselves to each other should have many spats. Left alone, with no interference, after every fight they will kiss and make up and no harm is done, but with mother urging Tom to stand firm and be the head of his own house and mother exhorting Mary not to let herself be walked over, the home becomes a battleground and love is slain.

Nor would many husbands and wives find out what poor, weak, miserable creatures they had married if mother wasn't around to point out Tom's and Mary's faults. A charge of dynamite under the doorstep is no more likely to blow up a home than an in-law is.

Seventh. Use as much tact in handling your husband after marriage as you did before. Before marriage you never dreamed of telling Tom of his faults or criticizing anything he did. You laughed at his jokes and listened with bated breath to his stories, no matter if you had heard them a dozen times before. Your chief come-on was leading him to believe that if he married you he would have an admiring audience in you and get a wife who appreciated what a remarkable man he was.

The same technique that caught a man will hold him, and if you want your husband to continue to eat out of your hand all that you have to do is to keep up the good work of making him feel that you still admire him beyond all other men and regard him as an oracle and a spellbinder. Wives are the only women in the world who are stupid enough to tell men what they really think of them, and that's why so many of them lose out.

Eighth. Don't argue. Nine-tenths of the family rows start in a perfectly senseless argument over something that neither party really cares a rap about. But the husband isn't going to let the wife think she can lay down the law to him, and the wife is determined to have the last word, and so they go at it hammer and tongs, and before they know it they are shouting insults at each other that neither ever forgives.

An argument never does any good. Nobody is ever convinced that he or she is wrong and the other is right. The only purpose it serves is to make discord in the home and hard feelings between those who really love each other.

If there is a topic that is like a red rag to a mad bull to your husband, never let it be dragged out on the carpet. If you and your husband differ in your religious and political beliefs, don't discuss them. Let him hold his opinion in peace while you cling to your own. Don't talk over everything that you are going to do with your husband unless you know beforehand that he is in accord with your ideas. It saves a lot of friction for a wife not to talk too much.

Ninth. Make a cheerful and a comfortable home. That is just as much your part of the business of marriage as making a living is your husband's, and he has just as much right to expect a pleasant and an efficiently run home as you have a right to expect to be supported. In these days of fierce competition in business every man's life is a hard one, full of strain and anxiety and nerve-rack and worry. Every wife should realize that and that it is up to her to make her home a place of rest and peace and brightness in which her man can relax and from which he will go forth refreshed to the battle again next day.

Your house frock should be one that borrows its ideas from the sports or spectator sports mode.

Why wear a house frock that you have to apologize for when you have to answer a ring of the door bell?

You can make this model in a couple of hours. Its small cost is amazing. And it's the prettiest thing imaginable, so entirely flattering. It's a rayon in orchid ground with purple spots, purple bindings and buttons.

Realize that when your husband married you he put not only his heart but his stomach into your hands, and it depends upon the way you feed him whether he will be going strong at 70 or a nervous wreck at 40. Also, his prosperity will depend largely on your cooking, for many a man after a breakfast of soggy toast and mean coffee has been so dyspeptic and pessimistic that he turned down the offer that would have made him a fortune or quarreled with his best customer or got fired for saying something sarcastic to the boss.

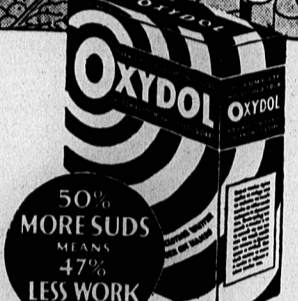

Women are always asking why men leave home and why they desert their wives for other women. The answer is, in most cases, that they left home because their homes were dreary and forbidding and they were set down to poisonous meals and their wives were just bundles of complaints and whines. You don't often hear of a man passing up a jolly wife who is a crackjack cook for a flapper.

Tenth. Don't cut out the romance. Don't cease to be a lady love. Don't quit making a fuss over your husband. Don't give all of your time and thoughts and attentions to the children. Don't let your husband feel that the baby has put his nose out of joint. Keep on showing your husband that you love him and admire him and appreciate him. Being heart-hungry isn't exclusively a female complaint. Men have it, too. They want their wives to show them that they are just as much in love with them as they were in their courting days. They want a few kisses that are not flavored with ham and eggs. Remember that a compliment a day will keep the divorce lawyer away. If you forget all the other rules for being happy though married, remember this. It is the most important. DOROTHY DIX. (The End.)

Lee went straight out of the station, without once looking back, flung himself into his car and started it immediately. What he was thinking or feeling, the wisest man on earth could not have guessed from his set, sullen face. And yet a turmoil of emotions was raging through him that made him most uncharacteristically uncertain as to what to do. He decided to go to the Linforth's office; decided not to; decided for something else and then against it; and finally with a feeling of utter dejection turned in the direction of the flat. As he was rounding a corner, slowly, into Piccadilly he was halted from the pavement by Jocelyn Upton, and drew up beside the cub to greet her. "Want to give me a lift?" she asked, her thin eager little face lighting up. "Certainly. Get in," he answered, and she obeyed. "Where to?" he asked, as he started off again. "Anywhere. I don't mind. Shall a deep cough, while she took the other. "So nice to have you all to myself again, after all this time. . . How's the married state? Does it offer any real compensation for a state of single blessedness?" Lee was in no sort of mood for this kind of thing, but he managed a laugh and mumbled something to turn it off. "Drink, Jim," she said next. "No thanks, Jocelyn. . . " "Oh, la-la, are you turning good?" she scoffed. "Is it turning good to refrain from doing something you don't want to do?" he retorted. "Well, I don't mind telling you, that the middle of the morning is my time for a little refreshment. If respectable old aunts who have any thing to leave in their wills happen to blow in, I drink it with a shudder. . . That makes even whisky perfectly respectable. . . But I'll reform this morning, and have a cigarette instead. "You won't be shocked at that?" She looked at him with pretended concern, then lit a short, stumpy little cigarette, and put one, with a rather angularly coquettish gesture into his mouth. "I don't want one of these scented, silly little things!" he protested, half-laughing. But she silenced him by thrusting forward the one she held between her lips, as a means of lighting his. Which the cigarettes being so exceptionally short, brought their noses very nearly touching. She drew away, laughing. "Now you see the reason, don't you?" she said, softly. "Reason of what?" he asked, rather moodily, smashing the cigarette into an ash tray. "Why they are made so short. . . " she retorted with a pout on her thin, scarlet-painted lips. He rose abruptly. "I must go. . . " he said quickly, almost unbearably irritated by her. "Darent you stay?" she questioned softly. He looked at her, suddenly startled. There had been a mean ins in that, that had mislead her up till now. Then he turned athen added: "And she was wondering what could be done about it." "Done? What did she mean. . . " "Well, Jim dear, marriages aren't the irrevocable things, these days, that they once . . . " She broke off, for really the pain he was inflicting on her hand was almost unbearable. "Did she . . . suggest . . . anything of that sort?" he asked. She was suddenly doubtful from something that was in his voice as he asked that question, whether that torturing grip on her hand was altogether as much due to the fact that it was her hand, as she had been imagining. She pulled it away rather sharply, and said in a tone that suggested the spit of a cat: "Go home and ask her." "She's away," he replied. Her eyes lit with a sudden new interest. "Since when?" she asked. "This morning. . . I've just seen her off." "Where has she gone?" "He was off his guard; shaken by what she had said, and so he answered the question, as best he could. "She has had to go north, to King It.
