SANDRA THE JEALOUS

IRMA BARTON IS MARRIED

CHAPTER CXXIII.

Barrett Edmonds called a few days after I had received Rose's letter. I told him something of what she said, because he had spoken of knowing of the gossip about Walter—and he said:

"I am not surprised. In fact I am only astonished that she has stood it so long. It is common talk that he neglects and abuses her."

"She says she still loves him." "That is what I can't understand. She isn't the only woman in Walter Kemp's life who still loves him. The fellow seems to have a sort of fascination for women which men cannot explain or understand. He is a male vampire."

"Yet she says he is well liked by business men in Chicago, and I know he was here. Everett didn't like him didn't want me to receive him, yet he spoke highly of Walter's business ability and business principles."

"The man is a Jekyll and Hyde. I am very sorry for your friend. But if she can go home and be contented I should think she would be glad to get rid of him."

"She still loves him," I repeated. Irma Barton was to be married. We had received invitations, and I was to have a lovely new gown for the wedding. I begged for a pale yellow, a love of a gown, but Everett would not allow me to have it. Another blue dress, lighter than a sapphire, was his choice. It was really lovely, and I had to be content.

We sent Mrs. Barton an exquisite lamp which cost a fabulous amount. But Everett laughingly said:

"We shan't have a chance to send her another wedding present, and we'll do it up brown."

"How do you know you won't. He might die, and she get married again. It was in my mind that she wasn't as old as Everett was when he married me."

"Then we will send her the mate to it," he retorted, flushing a little. I was sure he had read what was in my mind.

I had a wonderful time at the wedding. Barrett Edmonds was there, and Alice Sloane and her husband, besides several other young people. We danced after the bride and groom left on their honeymoon trip, and I enjoyed myself hugely. The only drawback was that horrid fat Mr. Leveridge who seemed always to do something to annoy me.

I had to dance with him, as usual, because of his business affiliation with Everett. And as usual he stepped on my toes, and almost ruined my new silver slippers. I didn't mind that so much as I did what he said. Everett could afford to buy me more slippers, especially as they were spoiled because I was being nice to a business associate of his. But while we were dancing he had remarked in that oily voice which I loathed:

"I suppose your husband is happy now."

"I hope he is," I replied.

"I hear that boy is a fine youngster. He always wanted a son."

"Most men do, don't they?" I asked as innocently as I could.

"Perhaps," then he added coarsely.

ly: "but some of us don't have the chance to marry a young woman to give us one."

I was furious. If it had not been for Everett's repeated warnings that I must not get angry at Mr. Leveridge, that he was a rough diamond, etc., I should have told him never to speak to me again. As it was I pleaded that I was tired and cut the dance short. On the way home I told Everett:

"That odious Mr. Leveridge told me again tonight that you only married me so you might have a son, and was disgustingly coarse and common."

"As long as we both know better, why should we let what anyone says make us unhappy?" he returned laying his hand on mine.

Tomorrow—Alice Sloane Visits Sandra.

IN HUMANITY AND WASTE

The annual loss of life among food animals in transit to Chicago, alone is reported to be as follows: Cattle, 1,796; calves, 2,198; swine, 9,330; sheep, 3,120. More than to anything else this loss is due more than to anything else to the cruel and inconsiderate treatment of these poor creatures in loading and unloading and on the journey no one will question who knows anything about the evils connected with the transportation of animals.

The Benefit Of Fur Cleaning

The following letter speaks for itself:

Rose Bank Fur Farms
Southport, P. E. I.
Dec. 31st, 1918

Mr. J. B. Rombough
Charlottetown, P. E. I.

Dear Sir:—Permit me to express to you my thanks for your promptness and high class workmanship in which you cleaned all my silver fox pelts entrusted in your care. I am firm believer in giving credit where credit is due and you certainly deserve it. I am sure all interested in the fox industry for supplying a long felt want, I at first felt doubtful of your ability but you certainly have shown that you deserve every credit and encouragement: if you remember the first lot consisted of 13 pelts, I gladly would have sold them to the first one offering $3000 for the lot. I have just added 50 per cent to their value since you cleaned them, because I was in a much better position to judge them, after you gave them the cleaning, which gave me the opportunity to judge the lustre and quality, which I could not do before. I wish you every success in your undertaking and can assure you my future support.

TAKING NO CHANCES

A darkey was ushered into the employment office of the Du Pont Powder Works and plied with the usual questions put to all new hands taken on at the works. The darkey stood the examination pretty well, but was beginning to feel just a little "oneasy" when one of the men suddenly asked: "And who would you like to be notified in case of a serious accident?" The darkey paused a while and scratched his head a bit at this unexpected blow at his morale, but after a short time he thought of two persons who might like to know of his misfortune. Their names were written down. "And now," said one of the examiners, "where would you like to have your remains shipped?" "Where would I like to have my remains shipped?" repeated the darkey in a groggy sort of voice. "Boss, I've gwine to take 'em away from here right now."
