

My Wife's a Great Hand at Fixing Headaches

When a man says to his wife, "Give me something for my headache"—he is sure in luck if she hands him Alka-Seltzer.

That's why thousands of wives know they can rely upon Alka-Seltzer when hubby or some other member of the family is sick with headache or distressed with indigestion.

"Sallyann" is the Toast of the Forces

LONDON, Feb. 12 Major-General A. C. L. McNaughton issued an order for the day: Boredom must be fought on every front; the battle opened. Directing the offensive is Auxiliary Services, with the Sallyann as shock troops.

It is work of prime importance because on the efforts made by the Salvation Army and other auxiliary services in the field depends the morale of the troops to a decisive extent.

Movie shows, sports, indoor games, cartoons, concerts, competitions, sing-songs, outings and other social occupations are provided in thousands by the Sallyann men stationed in 35 different sectors which the Canadians are holding against such attack.

The commanding officer of a well-known Canadian regiment said to me: "If it were in my power I'd decorate the Sallyann for high-toned conduct in the field.

How is it done? I later asked the Sallyann man. "Not by prayer and fasting," he gently replied, "but by providing the men with healthy recreation so that they don't need to go elsewhere to kill boredom.

There is so much going on in our centre that they haven't time to be bored. They are encouraged to write copiously home by the provision of a typewriter.

They enjoy the informality of the past, sitting around, drinking tea and coffee without charge, while exchanging hometown gossip with each other.

A RESCUE VALENTINE

DURBAN—(CP)—"Help coming from land and sea... Love and kisses from the South African Air Force" read a note which fluttered from an airplane that discovered the crew of a torpedoed merchant ship, stranded on the African Coast, after five days in a lifeboat.

The Feminine Touch

One room contains the bar, where soft drinks, sandwiches and chocolate bars are provided. A dozen little tables with dainty covers, and chairs to match, fill the rest of the room.

The three main rooms have been furnished as lounges. Deep armchairs, cushioned window-seats, soft lights and music from concealed radio make the rooms attractive.

Every night except paynight, when most soldiers go to the cinema, Canadians bring their girl friends.

Sitting-Rooms Like Home

"No girl can enter without her own escort," it was explained. "We provide the couples with the kind of sitting-room where if they were at home in Canada they would take their girls for an evening with their parents' knowledge and approval."

I began clearly to see what a wonderful—and wonderfully courteous—work the Sallyann man is doing. He was realistically facing facts. Canadian soldiers are, of course, finding sweethearts here—more than 2,000 of them have married English girls.

There have been more than 20 marriages among the Canadians stationed in the Surrey town and from what this blushing reporter saw, there will be more. Many a young soldier and his lass will, in their old age, look back over the years that are already slipping into the past with gratitude to that Sallyann house.

The word Eskimos means "the people who eat raw flesh."

MASONIC DANCE

A very enjoyable dance was held last evening in the Oddfellows' Hall under the combined auspices of St. John's and Victoria Masonic Lodges. A goodly number approaching the 200 mark thoroughly enjoyed the tuneful melodies of O. E. Presby's six piece orchestra.

The dance was very graciously chaperoned by Mrs. R. H. Rogers, Mrs. J. C. Montgomery, and Mrs. Frank VanDerstine. Many expressed themselves as being well repaid for making an extra effort to be present at such a pleasant evening's entertainment and departed hoping the Masonic Lodges would soon again sponsor similar happy and successful events.

SECOND TIME OF ASKING

Across the homes of Canada from sea to stored sea. The War Loan bugle call rings out "A Bond speeds Victory". Come, answer now with faith-rimed hearts. Help keep the flag unfurled. And liberty a living thing. To cheer this troubled world.

Be thankful our great country asks a favor which can light. Fresh beacons for democracy. Along the road of right. Those marring dollars will protect. The temple of the soul. And bring the brave in freedom's cause. Nearer a triumphant goal.

Then open up the pocket book. Pare savings neatly down. Let us "Stand by one another" And lend without a frown. —Amy Bissett, England.

HACKING IS NOT CARVING

Carving, and especially the carving of poultry, can be either a joy to behold or a disgusting spectacle—according to whether or not the carver knows his job.

The competent operator manipulates his dissecting instrument with graceful precision, delicately disjuncting the slicing. The bungler who has never taken the trouble to study even the first principles of carving, substitutes brute force and ignorance for skill. Such ineptitude, applied to the dismemberment of a roast goose or a roast duck, is a most always disastrous.

Next the breast is attacked and because its easy slicing offers an opportunity to recover some lost prestige, is usually hacked off in thick slabs—so that it is all gone before everybody is served.

The best that can happen to such a duffer is that the bird will end up on the table rather than in somebody's lap.

Yet, successful carving is not difficult of accomplishment. The art is fully explained in most cook-books and can be learned readily. The trouble is that too many people seem to think that the ability to carve properly is instinctive—like being able to breathe. If any of our readers hold to that belief a little study of the subject will prove enlightening. Also it will likely result in a more enjoyable and notable dinner for themselves and their families.
