ANOTHER TRIBUTE FROM AN ISLANDER

Mr. Vaniderstine of St. Peter's Bay Gives His Experience.

It is a pleasure to bear tribute to the good work of the Farador.

Over three years ago I began the treatment when I was in a rundown condition. A few applications put me in perfect health. It has also helped my eyesight, so much that I can now read to a great extent without glasses.

We make use of the Farador for every ailment arising in the family. For example, my little grandson was very ill in December with all the symptoms of pneumonia. He had a very high fever and was gasping for breath. His father was about to send for a doctor, but I applied the Farador and in fifteen minutes the child was fast asleep, his breathing became easy and the fever was reduced. He slept without a movement for nearly three hours. He then got up, walked to the table and ate a hearty meal. The treatment was resumed for a little time and the symptoms showed no return afterwards.

Shortly after this he had chickenpox and a little later whooping cough but the Farador put his blood in such good condition that the ailments disappeared as quickly as they came. My daughter also had the Farador applied for whooping cough which was followed by a speedy cure.

I attribute these speedy cures to the fact that the Farador was put to use at the outset of the ailments.

Several months ago I injured my leg. It became black, swollen and painful extending from half way below the knee to the sole of the foot and nearly to the toes. All the symptoms of blood poisoning were apparent. The Farador was applied and in less than a week I was entirely healed.

The Farador has done grand work in this vicinity wherever it has been used. I strongly and earnestly recommend it to those who need health. Such should begin its use early and not waste time with experiments.

Graphic Description

Africans with us and we had a most pleasant afternoon and evening. The English people appeared to think a great deal of all the colonials and did everything to give us a good time while on our furlough. They surely treated us royally. One thing you can notice that the war is doing is that it is making the rich people or upper class, especially the women, more useful, and standing them on the level.

Well, all things must come to an end, be they ever so good, so our visit to London ended at 8.30 p. m., Oct. 19th.

We had about an hour and a half on the train, and got to Milford station about 10 o'clock. As we were somewhat tried we took a bus from the station to camp. We tumbled into our own little bunks about half-past ten. Perhaps we were more than tired and somewhat poorer than when we had left a week before, but the trip was certainly worth it many, many times.

But just imagine! Back to our little wooden bunks and gray blanket in our one-room hotel, and then to rise about 6.30 to get ready for a breakfast of bread, tea, and jam served in a "mess tin." Then for dinner we got potatoes and meat, served in the same "mess tin" and a little bread. For supper we got much the same as for breakfast! All that to return to after faring sumptuously in that great city, London, for six days! Would you imagine that it would be a good change?

But it is surprising how quickly one can drop to dreamland in our hotel, and forget that he is not on a spring mattress or between white sheets. And if the grub be good and plentiful we do not worry much about the quality of the china or silverware.

Anyhow, we are getting along pretty well at our hotel. I got weighed while in London and may say that I am holding my own. If you will not tell anyone how light I am, I'll tell you my weight. It was only 190 lbs. I could not believe the scales were accurate, but two of the other boys got weighed and said it told the truth for them, so I guess it must be true in my case too. We are not doing much work yet, so I guess that accounts for it.

Guess I had better stop for this time, else the censor may think from the bulk and weight of this letter, that there is an infernal packet or fatal document of some kind in it and open it. So good-bye for this time.

With love to all,
No. 1261360 GR. HADDON S. McLEOD.

HOW KUT WAS LOST BY THE BRITISH ARMY

The full story of the gallant but unavailing attempts to relieve Kut and rescue Major-General Townshend and his heroic garrison is told by Lieut.-General Sir Percy Lake in a despatch published last night in a supplement to the London Gezette. It is a record of dogged courage and determination in the face of unparralled difficulties and hardships.

Sir Percy Lake divides the operations into three phases:—

1st phase.—January 19to 23.—Unsucesful attempt to force the Hannah defile Commander Lieut.-General Sir F. Aylmer.

2nd phase.—January 24 to March 10.—A period of rest and reorganization, followed by the unsuccessful attempt to outflank the enemy's right in the vicinity of the Dujailah Redoubt. Commander, Lieut-General Sir F. Alymer.

3rd phase.—March 11 to April 30.—A brief period of preparation, followed by the attack and capture of the Hannah and Falahivah positions; failure to force the Sannaiyat position, and fall of Kut. Commander, Lieut.-General Sir G. F. Gorringe .

Trenches Won and Lost.

On the morning of January 20 the troops on the right approached to within 100 yards of the enemy's line, but were unable to advance further. The left column, consisting of the Black Watch, 6th Jats, and 41st Dogras, penetrated the front line with a rush, capturing trenches which they held for about an hour and a half.Supports were sent forward, but, losing direction and coming under heavy fire, failed to reach them. Thus, left unsuported, our previously succesful troops, when Turkish counter-attacks developed, were overwhelmed by numbers and forced to retire.

Heavy rain now began to fall and continued throughout the day. Telephone communication broke down,and communications by orderly became slow and uncertain. After further artillery bombardment, the attack was renewed at 1 p. m., but by this time the heavy rain had converted the ground into a sea of mud, rendering rapid movement impossible. The enemy's fire was heavy and effective, inflicting heavy losses, and though every effort was made, the assult failed.

"I cannot sufficiently express my admiration for the courage and dogged determination of the force engaged," states Sir Percy Lake. "For days they bivouacked in driving rain on soaked and sodden ground. Three times they were called upon to advance over a perfectly flat country, deep in mud, and absolutely devoid of cover, against well constructed and well planned trenches, manned by a grave and stubborn enemy approximately their equal in numebrs. They showed a spirit of endurance and self-sacrifice of which their country may well be proud."

General Townsend reported on January 25 that he could hold out for another eight-four days. Throughout February preparations were made for resuming the offensive ,and a surprise advance on the Dujailah Redoubt was begun on March 7.

A Night March.

The feature of this advance was a splendid night march across unknown ground. General Keary's column was in position at daybreak but General Kemball's column did not reach the point selected until more than an hour later, and the delay was highly prejudicial."

In the afternoon the corps commander received from his engineer officers the unwelcome news that the water suply contained in rainwater pools, on which he reckoned, was insufficient, and could not be increased by digging. It was clear that unless the redoubt could be carried that day the scarcity of water would of itself compel our troops to fall back, and accordingly the attack was renewed at 5.15 p. m. The Manchester and 59th Rifles, and some of the 37th Infantry Brigade succeeded in gaining a food hold in the redoubt. But here they were heavily counter-attacked by large enemy reinforcements, and, being subjected to an extremely rapid and accurate shrapnel fire from concealed guns, they were forced to fall back.

The troops who had been under arms for thirty hours, including a long night march, were now much exhausted, and General Aylmer considered that a renewal of the assult during the night could not be made with any prospect of success. Next morning the enemy's position was found to be unchanged, and our troops had to withdraw.

More rain followed and for the remainder of March every available man was engaged in digging embankments to prevent the whole country being flooded. At daybreak on April 5 the 13th Division, under General Maude, jumped out of their trenches and rushed the Turkish first and second lines at Hannah. The attack was brilliantly executed. The enemy's position was a maze of deep trenches, occupying a frontage of 1,300 yards, and extending for 2,600 yards from front to rear.

Position Captured.

On the right bank of the river the 3rd Division headed by the Manchesters, captured a Turkish position. After nightfall the 13th Division captured several more lines of trenches. The 38th Infantry Brigade and the Warwicks and Worcesters of the 39th Infantry Brigade did particularly well in this assult. The division suffered 1,300 casualties during the day.

During the night of April 5-6 and throughout the 6th the river rose steadily until at midday it reached the highest level of the year. Our guns were surorunded by floods, and for some time the position was distinctly critical.

At 4 a. m. on April 19 the 13th Division advanced to the assult on Sannaiyat. When within 300 yards of the enemy's front line they were discovered by the Turks ,who sent up Very lights and flaree and opened a heavy rifle and gun fire. The first line, including detachments of the 6th K. O. Royal Lancaster Regiment, 8th Welsh Fusiliers, 6th Loyal North-Lancashire Regiment and 5th Wiltshire Regiment, penetrated the centre of the enemy's front line trench. In the glare of the lights the second line lost direction wavered, and fell back.

Support thus failed to reach the front line at the critical moment in spite of the most gallant and energetic attempts. Our troops who had reached the enemy's trenches were heartily counter-attacked by superior numbers and driven back.

Heavy Fighting.

On the morning of April 17 the Beit Aiessa position was captured by Major-General Keary. Steady progress was made despite great difficulties and short rations. Heavy fighting took place during the day and next night. The 8th Infantry Brigade repelled six attacks and at dawn the Turks withdrew having lost between 4,000 and 5,000 men.

During the succeeding days some progress was made ,but many of the trops were worn out with fatigue. Large Turkish reinforcements came up and succeeded in forcing our troops back. Many men were unable to use their rifles, which had become choked with mud in crossing the flooded trenches ,and so were unable to reply to the enemy's fire.

"Persistent and repeated attempts on both banks had thus failed ,and it was known that at the outside not more than six days supplies remained to the Kut garrison. Gen. Gorringe's troops were nearly worn out. The same troops had advanced time and again to assult positions strong by art and held by a determined enemy. For eighteen consecutive days they had done all that men could do to overcome not only the enemy, but also exceptional climatic and physical obstacles—and this on a scale of rations which was far from being sufficient, in view of the exertions they had undergone, but which the shortage of river transport had made it impossible to augment. The need for rest was imperative.

Only one chance remained if Kut was to be relieved. The fast steamer Julnar with 270 tons of supplies attempted on the night of April 24 to run the blockade and reach the town. She was discovered, shelled and captured. Lieutenant H. O. B. Firman, R. N., and Lieut.-Commander C. H. Cowley R. N V. R.—the latter of whom had performed magnificient service throughout the campaign—lost their lives in the desperate attempt.

With the failure of the Julnar there was no further hope of extending the food limit of the garrison of Kut. Everything that was possible with the means to hand had been attempted. The troops only desisted from their efforts when through battle losses, sickness, and exhaustion, the limit of human endurance had been reached. On April 29 Kut surrenedred.

"I need not enlarge on the bitter disappointment felt by all ranks at the failure to relieve their comrades," writes Sir Percy Lake.
