WHO ARE YOU? A Davis?

The Romance of Your Name By RUBY HASKINS ELLIS

DAVIS A few families trace their lineage as far back as the Davises. They claim descent from Constantine the Great Roman Emperor, several centuries B. C. It is also believed that Bela Mawr, a one-time King of Great Britain, was a member of the family. In later times, however, the name was definitely established in Wales dated 1500, and in the banquet hall was the first man to assume the name. He married Maude Morgan, of Tyddin, Wales. At Tickenham, Somerset County, England, are the ruins of Rees Davis, dated 1500 and in the banquet hall is carved the coat of arms which formed the seal of the will of Ichabod Davis. One of the first of American Davises was William, of Roxbury, Mass., who settled there before 1640.

Another was David Davis, who came with his father from Wales in 1760 and settled in Delaware. The Davises bought 30,000 acres of land from William Penn, and were among the founders of the Welch Tract in Pennsylvania. Andrew Davis, Jr., was another immigrant from Wales, and settled in Middlesex County, Virginia. Eminent among his descendants of recent times are John Staige Davis, professor of medicine in the University of Virginia, and John Staige Davis, Jr., professor of surgery at Johns Hopkins University. Another early settler from Wales was Isaac Davis. His brother Rezin Davis, commanded a company in the American Revolution. Among his descendants living today is John W. Davis, Democratic nominee for President of the United States in 1924.

What Must a Man do to Hold His Wife's Affections?—Straight Talk to a Meddling Mother-in-Law—How Can This Mother Save Her Son From a Gold-Digger?

Dear Miss Dix—Women are always being told about what they should do to hold their husband's love. Among my friends there are a number of husbands who have failed to hold their wives' love, so why not for a change tell men how to retain their wives' affections? We men are just as interested in having our wives faithful to us as women are in having their husbands loyal to them. A HUSBAND.

Answer: Perhaps the reason that more advice is given to wives about retaining their husbands' affections than to men about keeping their wives in love with them is because men are not only more apt to roam, but they have more temptations to roam than women.

Every good-looking married man, especially if he has money, is more or less pursued by young and pretty women, but when a woman has once settled down as a wife and mother she is generally as safe from the attentions of men as if she were in a convent. A married woman has to be an exceptional good-looker and have flirtatious tendencies to attract the masculine eye.

Also, it is more important to a woman to keep her husband in love with her than it is for a man to keep his wife in love with him, because upon the husband's faithfulness depends the integrity of the home, and it is a woman's instinct, brought down from her cave mother days, to keep a safe place in which to rear her offspring.

But while women are naturally more faithful than men, they have not the ability, as men seem to think they have, of loving the unlovable and being faithful to the faithless. Most men cherish the comfortable but fallacious belief that woman's love is indestructible and that after she has once set her heart upon a man nothing that he does ever alienates it from him.

Never was there a more mistaken belief. There are thousands upon thousands of women who are tired to death of their husbands, and many a complacent man would get the shock of his life if he could know what his wife really thinks of him.

As a matter of fact, if a man wants to keep his wife in love with him, he has to be up and doing, for a woman's love is killed by disillusion, by nagging, by coldness and neglect, even as a man's is.

How, then, can a man keep his wife in love with him? By keeping himself looking attractive to her. If a slatternly woman in curl papers and with a soiled kimono on and run down at the heel slippers is repulsive to a man, even more disgusting to a woman is a slovenly man with a three days' stubble of beard on his face, with a soiled collar and rumpled clothes, sitting around in his stocking feet.

When a man goes a-courting he is barbered and perfumed and pressed, and it is that sort of sheik that the girl falls in love with. She would never say "yes" in the world to the untidy creature she is married to, who looks like something that the cat brought in and that ought to be sent to the laundry.

If a man wants to keep his wife in love with him he has to keep her interested. When wives decide that they have missed their soulmates and start out to seek their affluities, it is because they are bored at home. They have married for companionship and they have failed to get it. They don't find it very exciting to spend their evenings sitting up with husbands who are about as conversational as a graven image and who only grunt when they are spoken to.

Nor is every woman wildly excited over hearing every detail of her husband's business day and what he said to Jones and Jones said to him, or how he sold another radio or peck of potatoes. Most women read a good deal in these days and belong to clubs, and they would like to have their husbands keep up with them and be able to talk about the last new book or what is going on in the world.

If a husband wants to keep his wife in love with him he must show some real personal interest in her and let her see that he regards her as a lady love instead of just a useful piece of household furniture like the vacuum cleaner, or the gas range. He must notice whether she is well or sick. He must look at her enough to know whether she has on a new dress or not. He must remember anniversaries and show her little attentions and take her out to places of amusement.

Before marriage a man can always think of ways to please his sweetheart, of places she would like to go, of books she is interested in, and he is solicitous that she should have a good time, but after marriage he often drops all of these attentions and expects her to find being married to him a picnic enough for anybody and to remember his lovemaking as long as she lives.

It doesn't work. Women have to be wooed over again every day, and it is only the perpetual lovers who keep the love fires always burning on the altar of their wives' hearts.

Finally, if a husband keeps his wife in love with him he has to show her tenderness and consideration. The husband who says cruel and abusive things to his wife stabs her heart with a thousand wounds from which it bleeds to death. The man who never tells his wife of his affection for her, who never shows her any appreciation, freezes her love to death. It perishes of coldness and neglect.

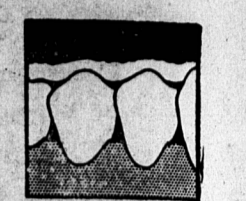

It is harder to keep a woman's love than it is to find it, and that is something for husbands to think over. DOROTHY DIX.

Dear Miss Dix—I have a son who has been married for four years and most of that time I have spent with him just because I feel I cannot go on living away from him, although I have a beautiful home of my own and enough income to live on. His wife is kind to me, but I often feel she doesn't want me, and she doesn't do things just the way I think she should do them. In the afternoon when she puts the two babies to bed she lies down on the sofa to read, and this worries me, for my boy is slaving his life away working, and I think she should be busy, too. I tell her that while the babies are asleep she should be sewing, quilting or something, but she says that is the only time she has to get any rest and she needs a little. This and the noise of the children make me so nervous that I can't sleep at night. What should I do? I am nearly 60 years old. A LONELY MOTHER.

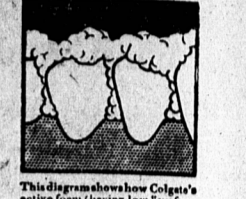

Answer: You should go to your own house and stay in it and not visit your son so much. If you love your son so much, prove your love by being unselfish enough to put his happiness and wellbeing before your own pleasure.

Have the courage to look the situation squarely in the face and see that you are imperiling the peace of his home by interfering in it. You see for yourself that although your daughter-in-law makes the best of the situation she doesn't want you there all the time. That is natural. When you were a young woman you didn't want your in-law as a perpetual guest. You

DANGER LURKS in Half-Clean Teeth!

Clearly magnified picture of space between teeth. Note how ordinary, sluggish toothpaste (having high "surface-tension") fails to penetrate deep down where the causes of decay may lurk.

This diagram shows how Colgate's active foam (having low "surface-tension") penetrates deep down into the space between teeth, cleansing it completely where the toothbrush cannot reach.

Decay starts when tiny crevices are left uncleaned... mere surface brushing is not sufficient protection.

Colgate's penetrating foam dislodges decaying particles from hard-to-clean places... cleans teeth completely. Don't risk the dangers of half-clean teeth. Play safe. Of course you want white, lovely teeth—Colgate's will polish them perfectly... but Colgate's does more. Its famous foam floods out the decaying particles hidden in tiny spaces between teeth and gives an antiseptic bath where ordinary dentifrices can't reach. Why not get these two advantages—each so vital? Buy a tube of Colgate's today—protect your teeth.

Colgate's is most economical—the 25c tube of Colgate's contains more toothpaste than any other nationally advertised brand priced at a quarter.

Household Hints By Roberta Lee

Prune Juice Prune juice is a good substitute for castor oil. Soak the prunes overnight. Stew them in the water they are soaked in and pierce them with a fork to let out the juice when they are tender. Do not sweeten.

Woolens Hang woolens on the line dripping wet and they will not be so liable to shrink as those wrung out before drying.

Mixing Cake Mix cake batter with a large wooden spoon. It becomes light much sooner.

Daughter Is Stronger Now

"My daughter Catherine is fifteen years old. She was very irregular, often sick at her stomach and had to stay in bed two or three days at a time. One of your booklets was sent to us by mail so I got her a bottle of Vegetable Compound. Catherine has been taking it regularly and she is gaining in weight and every day. I told the neighbors and four other girls are taking it with good results."—Mrs. Clarence Jenkinson, Box 14, Thornloe, Ontario.
