To Operate On 125 Pound Tumor

DALLAS, Texas, Oct. 25.—(A.P.)—The task of preparing a 350-pound Dallas woman for an operation to remove from her abdomen a 125-pound tumor, one of the largest known to medical science, began at a hospital here today.

"The tumor must be removed before it can be removed," Dr. J. H. Stephenson, Superintendent of the hospital said. "Otherwise the shock attendant to its removal might be too severe for the patient."

Stray Shot Injures Boy

(C. F. By Guardian's Special Wire) BRIDGEWATER, N. S. Oct. 25.—Driven 32 miles in an automobile after he was accidentally wounded, 12-year-old Roger Wentzell was in critical condition in hospital here tonight.

The HOUSEWIFE and HER ACTIVITIES

"Act quick and careful," mamma counseled, "and you can marry him, I tell you; he was here twice today, and now he's out looking for you."

Daisy removed her arms from about her mother who wanted her to act "careful and quick" so that she could marry Hoberg now, although last night, even if she had wanted to, she could not have. What was different now? Ket had killed—that is, Hoberg believed that Ket had killed and for her.

She thought of the people on the elevated poring over her picture, although they gazed at herself in only the usual way. But if they had recognized her, what a thrill she would have given them!

Such a thrill she had been supplying to Hoberg today! The glamour of the crime committed, supposed for her, had made her ferent and more desirable to Hoberg; because Adele had been killed, Joan Dairy Royle had ceased to be merely a good-looking girl who worked in his office and had become a new sensation; and she might capitalize that sensation to maneuver him into marriage, mamma said.

Daisy walked away and mechanically set to making mamma's bed, while trying not to think with disgust of mamma. "Where's Daddy?" she asked to change the subject, when mamma followed her into the bedroom.

"He's with Mr. Hoberg, trying to find you." And, thought Daisy miserably, undoubtedly Daddy was borrowing money from Hoberg. Daddy would miss no such chance as the gods had given him today. But never would he expect her to redeem his debt; nor, for all of Hoberg's money, would Daddy tell her to marry. Never would Daddy disgrace himself and her only in other ways.

Mamma undressed and slipped down upon the bed. "Rub my back now? Daisy," she bid. "Rub my back good. I've had a terrible hard day evening. That's a right nice looking man in the picture with you. Assistant State's Attorney Clarke, the paper calls him. Mr. Hoberg went to see him and told him what's what. Tell me deeper right there. That's good. Now tell me about that nice looking lawyer Clarke."

CHAPTER XXVI. A SON'S LETTER

"He's not nice looking," Daisy denied, with a sudden vengeance, which surprised herself. "He's mister God looking! He thinks he's mister God!" she cried out. "He's one of those essential citizens, mamma; he's one that packs the country on his back and the rest of us are dirt."

While Joan Daisy was thus making outcry to mamma against Calvin Clarke, he was engaged in like manner with denunciation of her to his mother. For he had returned to his rooms and was alone and, since it was Sunday evening, it was time for his regular letter.

Before beginning to write, he always imagined, according to the season, where his mother would be and what she would be doing when she should receive his letter on Tuesday morning.

This letter, he thought, would be delivered to her in the gate garden—the old, perennial garden by the white picket fence in front of the house, where the marigold and late chrysanthemum would be in bloom in the warm, October sunlight and where cosmos dotted delicate tints along the garden's edge.

"The gate garden," Calvin repeated to himself aloud for the pleasure and pride of the words; for this designation of the garden was more than two hundred years old, having been written in a diary of the date of 1722, proving that Calvin Clarke had a garden at that spot when a stock-picket followed the later line of the picket fence and that the original log gate had swung over the arc of the light, lattice barrier of today.

Calvin imagined his mother with garden shears in hand clipping the stems of cosmos and marigold for the table and glancing down the lane for old Santry, the postman, who would hand her the letter over the pickets and stand and chat for a minute or so.

His mother would go on cutting her flowers until she had forty blossoms, which she would arrange in vases in the cool, quiet north room overlooking the Merrimack, where she would set herself on the hooded bench beside the fireplace for an undisturbed reading of his letter.

She was tall and spare and strong like her mother, with wavy hair, simply arranged and clear.

Healthful color in her cheeks; and her calm resolute blue eyes would need no glasses to read.

So, having seen her, Calvin began, with his mind on her, every perfectly. Thank you, mother. The neck bands are exactly right. I am well as usual and have plenty of exercise. I keep busy and I am sure to find myself a great deal busier than I have been.

"For I am assigned to the prosecution of Ketlar."

"I say, casually, 'Ketlar,' for I have no doubt that his fame has reached you before this. Here, even before he shot his wife, every one knew him. He was a hero, being a band leader."

"He is a boy, barely twenty-four years old, born of an unmarried mother who was a manicurist in a barber-shop. Ketlar was her name, of nationality indeterminate as yet, but not personally seen her. The father, of course, is completely problematical."

"Ketlar's reward for ridding himself of his wife was to have been the Royle girl, who unquestionably I have not personally seen her. The father, of course, is completely problematical."

"She lives, or lived, immediately above Ketlar, in an exact duplicate of his own flat, having moved into the Royle girl's house, who unquestionably I have not personally seen her. The father, of course, is completely problematical."

"The marked betterment in Canadian economic conditions during the past year is indicated by the trend of major factors. The averages of important indexes during the first eight months of 1934 compared with the comparable figures for the same period of the preceding year, indicate a marked measure of progress made since the low point of the depression was reached in the early months of 1933.

The index of the physical volume of business averaged 94.6 in the first eight months of 1934, a gain of 23.6 p. c. over 75.7, the standing in the same period of last year. The business index is based on 45 factors relating to the trend in mineral production, manufacturing, construction, electric power and distribution. The factors are individually adjusted for seasonal tendencies and expressed as a percentage of the monthly average for the base year of 1926.

The index of the cost of living advanced from 77.9 to 78.8, showing the very modest gain of 1.1 p. c. The gains were mostly recorded in food and clothing, as fuel, rent and sundries reached slightly lower levels. The index of common stock prices averaged 89.0 in the first eight months of 1934. This compares with 64.6, the low level during the same period of last year. The gain in this comparison was consequently 33.1 p. c. Mining stock prices averaged 49.3 p. c. higher, the index being 129.4 compared with 86.7.

Bond prices computed from yields on Ontario government bonds reached an extremely high level in August, the index averaging 113.6 in the first eight months of the year. The gain over 101.8, the average for the same period of the preceding year, was 11.8 p. c., a marked increase in a factor not normally subject to wide fluctuation.

U. S. Aircraft Carriers Side Swipe In Lock

(A. P. By Guardian's Special Wire) CRISTOBAL, C. Z., Oct. 24.—The huge aircraft carriers Lexington and Saratoga sidestepped and smashed lamp-posts during lockage today and tied up part of the United States fleet behind them in Gatun Lock during the transit to the Pacific.

It was reliably learned the maritime division of the Canal Zone anticipated inability to keep the schedule of the ships' movement, which was set for completion at noon tomorrow. At six a.m. today the fleet was 30 minutes late because intermittent heavy rains retarded the operations.

It was unofficially said the officers in charge of the canal transit had hoped to clear all 88 ships in less than 40 hours. In a test last April 110 ships were cleared in 47 hours from the Pacific to the Atlantic.

What a leisurely and deliberate game was Croquet, yet how attractive our grandparents found the green lawns, the painted hoops, the gaily striped mallets and balls. Other and more strenuous games have replaced it, but how suited it was to the sports clothes of the times!

Sports Clothes of the Eighties were so different from ours... Yet they, too, were washed with SURPRISE SOAP

Clothes in the Eighties were mostly hand-made and could only be replaced after many hours of painstaking sewing. Even then they were washed with Surprise Soap and the results proved what housewives of today also know, that the outstanding quality of Surprise is its safety.

Surprise Soap always does a thorough washing. The rich, penetrating lather foams up easily and quickly, yet the gentle suds are so pure and mild that the most delicate garment cannot possibly come to any harm.

Dainty fabrics and exquisite colours are always safe with Surprise Soap because it washes so quickly and with so little rubbing. And this helps clothes to last longer, too, for this easy washing keeps them shapely and unfaded.

A Few Questions

Everyone should know the answers to these questions—Are my eyes really efficient? Are they normal or near? Are they strained? What error or errors of vision have I? Do I overwork my eyes? Do I give them the care their importance demands? Should I have them examined and receive the aid they may be found to need.
