VISITING OLD HOME.—Mr. James McDonald, formerly of Mount Stewart, Prince Edward Island, and now of Boston, Mass., is at present visiting his old home after an absence of thirty-seven years. Mr. McDonald has been employed for the most part as a car inspector for the Boston Elevated Company, but recently has branched out and is now a senior member of the Public Service Building Company, with offices in the Atlantic National Bank Building, Milk Street. It may be mentioned that Mr. McDonald's parents are still living and hearty, his mother, Mrs. Augustus McDonald, having passed the ripe old age of 91 years, while Mr. McDonald is still active at 88 years. Mr. McDonald is the youngest of three sons. Alphonso, the eldest joined the West Virginia police department 35 years ago, and is now a captain of police in that state. The second eldest, Joe, is in the American Navy. All three may well be termed successful islanders abroad. Mr. McDonald sees many changes on the island, especially in the City. He is greatly impressed with the splendid building in our City and waxed ecologically on the magnificent streets throughout the different sections. Mr. McDonald plans on spending an extended vacation on the island before returning to the States.

MCPHERSON-NICHOLSON.—A very quiet but pretty wedding took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Hugh Nicholson, Glen Valley, on the evening of Tuesday, April 12th, when their second daughter, Miss Jeanette Nicholson, was united in marriage with Mr. Hedley McPherson, North Wiltshire. The ceremony was performed by Rev. R. H. Stavert in the presence of quite a large number of the relatives and friends of the contracting parties. During the ceremony the bride party stood under a beautiful arch of roses and ferns constructed in the parlor. The bride elect who was given away by her father was handsomely gowned in watermelon georgette, trimmed with gold and silver and with work underlined with cream colored georgette and wore a veil of orange blossoms. The groom was ably supported by his brother, William McPherson, while the bride elect was attended by Miss Ruby Sharp. Miss Sharp looked charming in a costume of valencia color crepe de chene. The wedding march was well rendered by Mr. Wilfred Nicholson, brother of the bride-elect. After the ceremony was over, the guests sat down to a sumptuous repast, to which all did ample justice. When the supper was over, the large number of cheerleaders who had by this time assembled, were invited into the home and given a very generous treat. They furnished a considerable amusement for the wedding guests, and after a very pleasant visit they wended their way home in peace. The large number of useful and valuable wedding gifts testified to the popularity of the young couple. A miscellaneous shower had been held a few evenings before, at which Miss Nicholson was the recipient of many beautiful and useful articles. The bride's going away suit was of navy blue serge trimmed with squirrel fur and wore a hat to match. Mr. and Mrs. McPherson will reside in Glen Valley where Mr. McPherson has already proven himself to be a very successful farmer. The Guardian joins in wishing the young couple many years of happy wedded life.

Clowry—the fifth—I was caught off Roamer Shoals, by two Coast Guardsmen, in their speed boats. Their names? Reader and a Saunders or Sanderson. I had on board 4,785 cases of champagne, whiskey and cordials.

"They took us up to the Barge Office, off the Battery; then up to a police station somewhere on the West Side. It was Sunday morning. They got us a commissioner. We were bailed out promptly.

"This seized Clowry was an ex-Navy boat, bought from the Western Union Telegraph Company. Her tonnage I should judge was around 500 tons. She was a steam vessel, twin-screw, with a crew of twenty-six.

"Well, then I brought in 250 cases of Holloway's gin. Oh, no, getting pinched didn't bother us.

"The fleet at that time was from sixteen to twenty-five miles from the lights. None ever came within twelve miles of shore to my knowledge. They never flew any flags, except a code signal once in a while when warning us to keep away.

"The boss told me when I was coming in from the fleet either to keep close to the Coesey Island shore from Rockaway buoy and to keep close to the Brooklyn buoy and along the Shore Road or Bottle yard, and then up to the North River and keep close to the Jersey shore, around Liberty, and close to Weehawken or Hoboken. I sometimes went around Staten Island, depending on the trip.

"He told me before every trip he particular route to come in. Nobody would be there to bother us, he said. Some of the routes he gave us were much harder than the recognized channels to go through.

"Once I was told to go by the Statue of Liberty and there wouldn't be any customs boats or police boats and it would be all right. It was all right.

"The syndicate ran like any other business firm. I'd come into the office. The boss or one of his assistants would say, 'Take Steinberg's boat, the Mary.' Or, 'Take the Dorothy, take Kirsch's boat.' One thing and another like that.

"He'd order me to contact with some of his supercargoes—the sales agents aboard the schooners out there—Lefty Keating, Jack Furter, Will Maloney, George Ferguson.

"During those 200 trips I made to Rum Row I was under fire many a time. I've had 150's and 30-30's fired at me so often I can't recall them. Never hit me. Nobody ever got hit. It didn't sound pleasant to hear them and know they were shooting toward your boat.

"In one load I'd bring in 375 cases of champagne, or 350 cases of mixed cordials, or kops of rye. Sure, I asted most of them the cordials and some champagne and some whisky.

"That was when we'd be coming in, and nothing to do but steer the vessel and keep the engines humming, looking out for a patrol boat now and then. We'd look over the cargo, go from case to case, sampling. If it was terribly cold we'd drink a lot. I'd drink a quart or two of champagne, and what I was particularly fond of was the 'Singer's Midgets.'

"The 'Singer's Midgets' were the miniature bottles that contained just one drink. The little bottles held sherry brandy, apricot brandy, creme de menthe, peach brandy—stuff like that.

"The Scotch was Black and White, Johnny Walker, Dewar's White Label. There was also rye. I drank a quantity all the time.

"I sampled around until I got one I liked best. Oh, I'd take just a taste—part of a glass, a little bit of a glass. If it suited, all right. If not, I tried something else.

"Well, if it didn't suit me I'd throw it on the deck where we were sitting. Or else gave it to somebody who liked it. My favorite cordial was sherry brandy. I drank quite a lot of it during cold nights coming up the harbor. I did the same as all the rest of the crew.

"Every one was drinking right along.

"I had a Packard at the time. My chauffeur introduced me to Miss Rosemary T. Traynor of Brooklyn. She lived with her people at Sumner and Lexington Avenues. A year ago last November we were married in the Municipal Building.

"We never lived together. Her people objected—it was the liquor; they did not like the job I was working at. I had the wedding annulled in April.

"Then I left for a fishing trip in a motor boat. The engine broke down. We were doused by the seas coming aboard. Ran out of food. We were picked up at sea thirteen days later and taken to Gibraltar. From there we were sent to Liverpool and back to Boston on a passenger vessel.

"About those shots. It was at the narrows, between Port Wadsworth and Port Lafayette. They were machine gun bullets, sent over our boat. But we got away. It was the Helen. She was sixty-foot long, about eleven or twelve foot beam. She had three 450-horse power Liberty motors. Mighty swift.

"The boat chasing us was shooting in the dark. They might have hit most anybody.

"Right after the armistice I got restless. One day I struck a petty officer. I got three months confinement—barracks discipline.

"Now I've got this Treasury boat job. I've been painting—rigging the vessel up—to make her seaworthy. I took her for a trial run to New London yesterday to see if the machinists did their work right on the engine.

"Mr. A. Bruce Bielaski, an attorney-at-law, 120 Broadway, under-cover chief, called me to his office two months ago. He asked me did I care to give a story of how I did run-running, and I said, 'Yes, sir, I'll do it.'

"Now I've told everything, told the truth. My conscience is clear." The guiding genius of the syndicate employing Captain Smith, also some of his chief workers, are now in prison.

(In the next article of this series, there appears an official discussion of "The Alky Flood in Philadelphia.")

"We didn't have any lights running. I could see their lights. We first noticed the lights when we left Norton's Point by Coney Island. It was about 3.20 early morning. The sun hadn't risen; utterly dark.

"But we raced them for ten miles, got away.

"We kept on going.

"That's the main thing, when you're chased. It may look bad for a while, but if you keep your mind to it you'll get away.

"Sometimes that Government boat would be only two or three blocks behind, less than an eighth of a mile. They banged away but never hit us once.

"She gave up at about the middle of the anchorage, a little above Quarantine station, about a mile or little less, near the Narrows. Some big passenger liners were anchored there, just in from Southampton. Men and women lining the rails.

"We just outran her and she turned around and went back. We tied up at Lord's dry dock, Weehawken. This boat that I was on—the Helen—was the fastest that I have ever seen in my life.

"Well, in the spring I quit working for the syndicate. Why? Well, that's my personal affair. I wasn't sore at them—I got pretty good money. Two hundred dollars for a night trip. Now I've got charge of one of the U. S. Treasury Department boats at $50 a week. I run rum boats for two years, but I'm through now.

"Yes, during the war I commanded a naval vessel, the U.S.S. Riette. It was in the latter part of 1917. I was acting as commanding officer. I never struck the home base for three months at a time.

"Right after the armistice I got restless. One day I struck a petty officer. I got three months confinement—barracks discipline.

"Now I've got this Treasury boat job. I've been painting—rigging the vessel up—to make her seaworthy. I took her for a trial run to New London yesterday to see if the machinists did their work right on the engine.
