Hornsby Avoids Players' Rules

The tactics of Rogers Hornsby in managing a ball club have created considerable controversial discussion since he first took over the helm of the St. Louis Cardinals and piloted that team to the world championship in 1926.

Hornsby's methods are supposed to be what started his trouble with the New York Giants and caused him to be shipped up the river to the Boston Braves. It is said that Hornsby, while managing the Giants in the absence of McGraw who was ill, took no orders from anyone about running the ball club. An official from the business office is said to have criticized Hornsby's judgment in Pittsburgh one day during the heat of the pennant race. Hornsby heard about it and he let the official know in no uncertain terms who was running the Giants.

It seems that Hornsby doesn't plan to change his ideas any in managing the Chicago Cubs.

"I've been a ball player for a long time," says Hornsby, "and I hope to be a manager a long time. I'm going to operate on the theory that I'll treat my players the same way I'd like to be treated myself. If we can't get along, then it's just too bad.

"But I'm going to run the ball club. And the sooner everyone finds that out the better off everyone will be. That's what I'm hired for and if I don't deliver I expect to be canned. I'll protect my players as long as they protect me."

Hornsby has only one hard and fast rule for his players—they must deliver. There are no rules about what time the players go to bed or what time they get up or what they do in off hours.

"I believe in letting ball players have a lot of rest and sleep," says Hornsby. "What's the use of players getting up early in the morning if they're still sleepy and have to sit around the hotel lobby for three or four hours.

"They don't have to be in bed at 10 or 11 o'clock. I don't care what the players do when they're off the field. They can play golf, fish, swim, or do whatever they want to. They can sing, dance or cut up.

"But when they are on the field all that's out. I don't want to hear any talk about girls, stocks and bonds or anything but baseball. They can't even smoke as long as they are in uniform."

Hornsby doesn't anticipate any trouble with any of his players. "My greatest trouble will be to keep them from hitting into double plays," he says.

Hardship And 17 Years

Of War Have Left Russia Indifferent To Suffering

Horrors Brought About by the Workings by the Soviet's Five Year Plan, Fail to Draw Tears from Eyes of Population.

EDITOR'S NOTE:—This is the sixth article of a series by Eugene Lyons, United Press Staff Correspondent at Moscow, after a residence of 36 months.

By EUGENE LYONS United Press Staff Correspondent (Special to The Guardian)

MOSCOW, March 9.—Seventeen years of war, civil strife and strenuous revolution, with a gruesome famine and long spells of short rations are enough to curdle the milk of human kindness in any people.

Here the process is intensified by a conviction of imminent danger, of plots hatching and new interventions brewing. The incessant outcry in the Soviet press about enemies at home and abroad is not political trickery. It is the genuine outcry of a country that does feel itself isolated and at bay, alone against the world.

None of this is conducive to tenderness and mercy. You can draw no tears from Soviet eyes by recounting the horrors of "liquidating the kulaks" or of suppressing the remnants of former ruling orders.

The Soviet population was more deeply shocked by the reprisals granted to Prof. Leonid Ramzin and his fellow-plotters than by the 48 executions which preceded it.

Spare No One

Ten communists, and the decisive minority which supports them wholeheartedly, do not spare themselves in the job they are rushing to a finish. They are not likely therefore to spare others. All of this is understandable.

But to an outsider the spectacle of callousness to human suffering on such a large scale is a fearsome thing. The Communist report that there is ample suffering outside too does not soften the sight here. Not only has it hardened those who passed through the civil war, an ordeal of blood, but it has toughened the skin of the new generation. School children talk glibly about shooting kulaks and Nepmen as do their elders.

Soviet life is not to be recommended to idealists with weak stomachs. They will have to swallow sights and sounds unsuited to tender digestions. The very word idealism has a rather like justice, freedom, mercy, they ring disreputable sound here; as for words like the coin of counter-revolution. Other noble words have been sanctified in their stead, words like duty, loyalty, discipline; fighting terms all of them.

Swept Aside

Those who stand in the path of the proletarian revolution are mercilessly cleared away. This applies not only to active enemies but to classes whose mere existence is considered superfluous.

It is impossible to estimate how many hundreds of thousands of kulaks, poor devils who by Russian standards are "rich" peasants, were stripped of their possessions and cast out to shift for themselves in Turkish deserts or Northern icefields. Their fate was just an episode in the drive for collectivized agriculture—a drive which from the Communist viewpoint was not only justifiable but unavoidable. By the end of 1931 the whole class of kulaks must be "liquidated."

In the cities there are masses of bedraggled hunted creatures without any political, or human rights, without even the right to a bread ration. No one dares or cares to raise their problem publicly. They are on the junk-heap of history but unfortunately for themselves still alive.

Perhaps the saddest spectacle is the bankruptcy of the old intelligentsia. These professors, engineers, scientists, doctors, scholars were among the pioneers of revolution under Tsardom. But this was not the kind of revolution they had bargained for, most of them opposed Bolshevism from the beginning. Only during the New Economic Policy they reconciled themselves to the Soviets, most of them under the illusion of a gradual evolution towards democracy and what they considered "sanity."

Intelligentsia Changed

When the illusion faded, when Stalin began his ruthless march towards communism, a large portion of the intelligentsia turned against the Soviet regime; a few openly, the rest secretly. Sabotage and counter-revolution flourished among specialists and professors in the very highest organs of the government's planning and executive divisions.

The recent trial of the Ramzin group, occasional announcements of mass executives, only are outward indications of the widening breach between the Soviets and the old intellectuals. A good proportion of them seek to work honestly and to accept the revolution. But the distrust of the class as a whole weighs upon them all. They work under outright or expert surveillance. A professor or a specialist—unless he is one of the new Red professors or Red engineers—admits his social standing only in a whisper. You can easily get a Soviet citizen more easily by calling him an intellectual than by calling him a horse-thief.

The creative intellectuals, in literature, theatre and the arts generally share this burden of mistrust. Not one of them, even if a member of the party, is permitted to work except under strict supervision by the working class. Aside from stringent official censorship, they are directed and controlled at every stage of their work by factory committees, collective meetings and "social orders" from the party of proletarian organizations.

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. PETER JOHNSTON

The death occurred at her home in New Glasgow, N. S., on January 5th, of Mrs. Peter Johnston, daughter of the late Mr. and Mrs. Daniel McPhail, of DeSable, her father having passed away some thirty years ago and her mother, five years ago. Educated in the district school, Mrs. Johnston was sent to Prince of Wales College, where she graduated and then taught school at North River. She later came to the city and accepted a position as bookkeeper for Mr. D. A. Bruce, remaining with the firm for five and a half years. She married Mr. Peter Johnston and four years later went to New Glasgow, where she resided until her death, which followed a period of ill health, caused by high blood pressure and a stroke.

Mrs. Johnston is survived by her husband, one son Fred, in Detroit, and four daughters, Mrs. Robert Orr, (Marion) in Chicago; Mrs. Levi Legrow, (Ethel), Toronto; Mrs. George Schrader, (Dorothy), New Glasgow, and Hazel, at home. She is also survived by a brother and two sisters in P. E. Island, and two brothers in the Canadian West.

The funeral took place from her home on Branch street, Thursday afternoon, Rev. Harold Frame officiating at the services. The hymns sung were "Softly and tenderly Jesus is calling," "Abide with me," and "The Sands of Time are Sinking." Quite a large number attended the funeral, although the weather was most disagreeable.

MR. M. T. LAMBE

The body of the late Michael T. Lambe, of Springfield, Lot 67, was sorrowfully laid to rest on Thursday, February 19, 1931, the final absolution being pronounced by his pastor, Rev. Frank MacDonald.

The funeral was one of the largest ever seen in Springfield, being attended by relatives and friends from far and near. The Benevolent Irish Society, of which the deceased was a life-long member, attended in a body and preceded the hearse. In St. James Church, Springfield, a High Mass of Requiem was celebrated by Rev. Frank MacDonald, the pastor, assisted by a full choir. The pall bearers were: Messrs. Everett Haslam, Norris Sinclair, Linus MacDonald, Eugene Smith, Wilbert Lawless and John McEntee.

Mr. Lambe passed away on February 15th. He became overcome while in the barn feeding the stock and after being removed to the house, passed away a few hours later, without regaining consciousness. Medical aid was immediately summoned, but to no avail, death being due to a hemorrhage of the brain.

The late Mr. Lambe was a member of the choir of St. James Church for over forty-two years, and also a member of the Charlottetown Council of the Knights of Columbus, and

IN MEMORIAM

MRS. MARGARET ELLIOTT

On Thursday, January 22nd, Mrs. Margaret Elliott, a very highly esteemed resident of Glen Valley, P. E. Island, passed peacefully away at the home of her son, Mr. Daniel K. McDonald, 91 Franklin street, Alliston, Mass., at the age of 61 years.

The deceased had been in a rather poor condition of health for quite a few weeks. In fact ever since her trip to P. E. Island, where she had been called at the time of the death of her brother, Mr. Murdoch H. McLennan, Charlottetown, in July last, she had from time to time complained of not feeling well. But not until a short time before her death, was her case thought to be serious. All that medical skill and kind friends could do was done, but all to no avail. Special mention is due Mrs. Daniel K. McDonald, daughter-in-law of the deceased, for her untiring devotion to Mrs. Elliott throughout the period of her illness. But in spite of all that was done, her strength gradually waned until on the above mentioned date, her gentle spirit winged its heavenward flight.

The deceased was twice married both husbands predeceasing her by quite a number of years. In the first family, there were two sons, both of whom survive their mother. These are Daniel K. McDonald and John A. McDonald. They are now left to mourn the loss of a kind and loving mother. By the second marriage, there were no children. One brother Alexander McLennan and one sister, Mrs. Christie Farrar, both of Quincy, Mass. Surviving Mrs. Elliott is another brother, Mr. Murdoch H. McLennan, of the Experimental Farm, Charlottetown, who predeceased her in July last.

Mrs. Elliott was a lady who was quite widely known and was held in high esteem by all. She was born in Glen Valley and lived the greater part of her life there.

For a number of years, she resided in Quincy, Mass., where she made many friends. Later she returned to her native province, where she remained until two years ago, when she and her two sons moved to Alliston, Mass., where she was at the time of her death.

The deceased will be much missed by a large circle of relatives and friends. She was a general favorite with young and old alike, and was known far and wide for her kindness of heart and her readiness to serve all who needed her help.

But while all shall miss her, it is in the home that her loss will be felt most keenly. It will never be just the same again, when "Mother" is not there. Her loved ones will often "Sigh for the touch of a vanished hand, And long for the sound of a voice that is still."

—but the touch of that loving hand will be felt on earth nevermore and the sound of that gentle voice is forever stilled. But yet believing that she has already received the plaudit of the "Well done good and faithful servant" none would be so unkind as to wish her unbound spirit, back into bonds again.

Before leaving Alliston, Mass., a funeral service was held at the home of her son, Mr. Daniel K. McDonald, and was conducted by Rev. Thomas R. Turner, of the First Presbyterian Church, Quincy, Mass.

The floral tributes were many and beautiful, and consisted of the following: Pillow, Pink and Red Roses and carnations with the word "Mother" inscribed thereon, by Mr. and Mrs. Daniel K. McDonald and John A. McDonald; Standing Wreath, Roses, Lillies, carnations and Chrysanthemums by her sister, Mrs. Christie Farrar and brother Alex McLennan and nephew and uncle; Wreath, Red and White carnations, by J. McDonald; Wreath, Pink and Red carnations by Mr. and Mrs. W. Buchanan; Wreath, Calla Lillies, Mr. and Mrs. Malcolm McKenzie and Miss Margaret McKenzie; Spray, Carnations, Mr. and Mrs. Duncan McLennan; Spray, Pink carnations by Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Clow and family; Spray, Red carnations, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Campbell and family; Spray, Pink Roses, Mr. and Mrs. Neil McDonald; They are now left to mourn the loss of a kind and loving mother. By the second marriage, there were no children. One brother Alexander McLennan and one sister, Mrs. Christie Farrar, both of Quincy, Mass. Surviving Mrs. Elliott is another brother, Mr. Murdoch H. McLennan, of the Experimental Farm, Charlottetown, who predeceased her in July last.
