SAYS HER RECOVERY IS ALMOST LIKE A MIRACLE

From Helpless Invalid to Complete Restoration of Health, Strength and Happiness Is Wonderful Change Mrs. Root Experienced in Three Weeks — Statement One of Most Remarkable On Record.

MRS. JENNIE ROOT

"Just a week beore I started taking Tanlac I was down in bed so crippled up with rheumatism I could not move without help. My son had taken Tanlac, and it had done him a world of good, so one day he brought home a bottle and said, "Mother, I want you to take this". When I had finished that bottle I felt like a different woman and by the time I had finished my second bottle, I was out in the garden hoeing.

"Tanlac has simply done wonders for me; it almost seems like a miracle". This is the remarkable statement made recently by Mrs Jennie Root, residing at 1409 Powers St., Portland, Oregon, and is only one of tens of thousands from well-known men and women who are daily testifying to the powers of Tanlac.

Continuing her wonderful statement, Mrs. Root said, "For years I suffered terribly with rheumatism, and would often be down in bed for days at a time. In the last five years there was not a time that I didn't feel those rheumatic pains all through my body. About two months ago I got very much worse and my arms and legs were so bad I was almost helpless and couldn't even hold a pen to sign my name. I was so weak I could not do any housework. I couldn't even sleep, and had no rest day or night. Even to walk a few steps would tire me out completely. When I tried to walk I would stagger, andwhen I did walk a little way and sat down I could not get up without someone helping me. I had no appetite and hardly ate enough to keep me alive. I could not stoop over far enough to get my shoes on.

"I never knew what a night's sleep was, and would lie awake for hours. At times I would get very cold and would have to get up and sit by the fire all huddled up and my daughters would put hot water bottles all around me. I was treated by four doctors, and took all kinds of medicine Nothing ever did me any good. I am just like a different person now. All those terrible aches and pains have left me, and only the other day I was able to walk up four flights of stairs in an office building when the elevator was out of order.

"My appetite is just splendid now, and just today for the first time in years, I felt so hungry that I had to go and eat a piece of pie between meals. In fact, I can't remember the time that I felt as well as I do now. I have not only regained my health and strength but I have gained fourteen pounds in weight. To tell you the truth wouldn't exchange the benefit I have received from Tanlac for the best ranch in Oregon and I will praise it as long as I live."

Tanlac is sold in Charlottetown by Reddin Bros., and all leading druggists everywhere.

A HUSBAND TO MARCIA

By CAROLYN BEECHER

Chapter XXVIII

John Aldrich did not look beyond the next few months as he sat in his den that night. He didn't dare to. He knew that in his heart was a hope that once he was free Elaine Westmore, some time in the distant future would belong to him.

The gray of morning had crept over the housetops when he finally went to bed, his mind a haze, his body even wearied from the strain of thinking.

He went to the Grand Central Station to meet Marcia. She would expect him, although the train came in the middle of the morning and would interfere with his work. But Marcia was very impatient of anything that looked like neglect.

He passed Elaine when he left the office. The eyes she raised to his were sad, even when her lips smiled. He quivered as if she had struck him, so sensitive to her slightest emotion had he become.

In the station he watched the seemingly never-ending stream of men and women coming from the train upon where he expected Marcia. At last he saw her. She espied him at the same moment and waved a daintily gloved hand in welcome.

"How-de-do, John! Missed me, dear?" she asked as she raised her lips for the expected kiss.

Marcia was looking wonderfully well. Her trim travelling costume was in the latest style, her feet are daintily shod, the little toque set becomingly upon her well-groomed hair—even her gloves were fresh and dainty. Yet between her hilhouette and him there came another picture—that of a tall, slender girl with midnight black hair, topped with a simple sailor hat, body clothed in a dark dress of some kind, her feet shod in sensible low-heeled walking shoes. But the face under the plain dress and under the sailor hat was full of the spirit of unselfishness. The eyes looked calmly into his, the lips urged him to do and be all a man should. With a start he heard Marcia's voice again:

"You expected me, didn't you? You got my message?"

"Naturally, or I should not have met the train," John replied, as he pulled himself together. "Give me your checks; I will attend to your luggage."

When he returned Marcia asked where the car was.

"I came from the office. You will have to take a taxi, or use the bus. I have ordered the expressman to deliver your trunk."

"Then get a taxi, please. It was a tiresome trip. I shall be glad to get home. Coming with me?"

"I'm sorry, but I can't. Delia is there and will look after you."

John had sent for Delia the day before. He had given her half pay the last few weeks of Marcia's stay with her mother, glad to have his freedom from all possible surveillance, although he had been conscious of doing no wrong.

That night when John reached home he found Marcia deep in a mass of accumulated correspondence, bills, club dues, invitations, etc.

She chatted amiably through dinner, emphasizing all her mother and girl friends had done for her pleasure.

"Bridges, dances, dinner and receptions galore," she declared. "It was good to be so appreciated."

"Yes, I know," John replied absently.

Marcia planned what she must do, the people she would entertain, the functions they must attend. John felt like groaning aloud as ahead of him stretched a dreary vista of visits, of playing the host, of theatres, etc.—all of which he knew he could not afford either as regarded money or time.

He felt that he been suddenly dropped down into the old pit of unreasonableness. This small talk, which for a month he had not heard, sounded so simple, so unworthy of a grown woman's entire thought.

John wondered more than once if he had nerve enough to make a decided stand, to tell Marcia he was through with the empty sort of life she was planning for him. Then he thought of her, as she was. Just Marcia. And waited.

After dinner Marcia threw herself into an easy chair, breathed a deep sigh of contentment, and said:

"It is good to be back with you, John. After all, there is no place like one's own home, no one quite like one's hunband. I do hope we are going to have some nice times together. We must never quarrel again. I cried myself to sleep one night thinking of the way we quarrelled over those horrid bills, the nasty old things!"

"They aren't all paid yet" John replied dully. He had not reckoned upon Marcia taking this attitude. That naive way of telling how glad she was to be back and the declaration that, after all, there was no place like home, no one quite like him.

It was upsetting to say the least very upsetting, he thought, as he lay thinking matters over long after she slept. It made him feel as if his mind had suddenly become disarranged, out of order.

"We must do what we have to do," Elaine had said once. And it was this that was in his mind when he finally fell asleep.

"What I have to do."

Pains So Bad Stayed in Bed

YOUNG MRS. BEECROFT HAD MISERABLE TIME UNTIL SHE TOOK LYDIA E. PINKHAM'S VEGETABLE COMPOUND

Hamilton, Ont.—"I have suffered for three years from a female trouble and consequent weakness, pain and irregularity which kept me in bed for four or five days each month. I nearly went crazy with pains in my back, and for about a week at a time I could not to my work. I saw Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound advertised in the Hamilton Spectator and I took it. Now I have no pain and am quite regular unless I overwork or stay on my feet from early morning until late at night. I keep house and do all my own work without any trouble. I have recommended the Compound to several friends."—Mrs. EMILY BEECROFT, 269 Victoria Ave., N., Hamilton, Ontario.

For forty years women have been telling how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored their health when suffering with female ills. This accounts for the enormous demand for it from coast to coast. If you are troubled with any ailment peculiar to women why don't you try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound? It is made from native roots and herbs and contains no narcotics or harmful drugs.

For special advice women are asked to write Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co., Lynn, Mass. The result of forty years experience is at your service. 223.

Sad Story Of Girl From A Maritime Provincial City

Responds to Advertisement From Canadian West and is Made White Slave

MONTREAL, Sept. 22.—One of the most pathetic cases handled by workers of the Traveller's Aid branch of the Y. W. C. A. was brought to the attention of that organization recently by a conductor on a western train who wired them that there was a girl on board in need of care, and asked them to meet her at the station. Even the workers who have become accustomed to tragic cases were horrified at the wreck placed in their charge. Shattered in mind, and with her health completely ruined the girl could scarcely tell her story and workers are not sure to this day whether she boarded the train at Regina or Moose Jaw or who purchased the ticket.

She had been born in a small city in the maritime provinces, she explained, and had seen an advertisement in her home town newspaper for a young woman to fill a position in Regina. Her mother was very much opposed to her going away, but her father thought that she would have a better chance of succeeding in the west than she had at home, and the girl herself was greatly excited at the thought of the adventure. Her father paid for her ticket and put her on the train. When she arrived at the station in the western city she was met by persons in an automobile and carried off to a house of disrepute; and for six months afterwards was guarded night and day and allowed no communication with the outside world.

Never Allowed Out.

She was choked into submission until she agreed to do as her keepers wished and during the period she was never allowed out of the house except for a few motor drives at night, and once when she was taken to a movie show. The clothes she wore were in ribbons when she reached Montreal, and the Aid had to get her something to wear before she could leave the station. Her mind was so broken that they could not find out from her how she happened to leave the place, and whether the house she was in was raided and she was sent home by the authorities, or whether the keepers of the place took this course as the easiest way of getting rid of her now that she was no longer of any use to them is a matter of conjecture. Her one cry was "I am a good girl. Do let me go home," said the worker.

The volunteer Aid in town the girl was from has been notified to watch for any advertisements similiar to that which brought her downfall; but those who frequent the stations say that this is but one of many similiar tragedies.

The unemployment situation is now straining to the utmost the resources of this as well as of other social service organizations, and the worker is called upon to settle many problems of transients who with scarcely enough money for fare are going to meet the wage-earner who has found work in some other place. The other day two young married women, one with a baby of nine months and the other with a tiny tot of two or three arrived, weary and faint from lack of food at Windsor station. Their husbands had gone harvesting, they explained, after months of vain searching for employment. The men had left the girls in care of friends, agreeing to pay for their board as soon as they were able to collect their wages. Shortly after their departure the people they were staying with turned the girls out, leaving them friendless and without any place to go to. The Traveller's Aid on duty took them in when they reached the station, gave them food through the co-operation of another organization and temporary lodging for the night.

Woman Gives Room

A poor woman heard of their plight and offered them the use of a room in her house until they could find positions for both were ready to work. One was quickly placed in a position, but the other though anxious to do something had no strength to support herself and her child. Her husband was informed of what had taken place and he told his troubles to the farmer who employed him. The latter said at once "Why, bring her here. She can help my wife," and he loaned his helper enough money to pay his wife's fare west. The woman had only $4 left of this sum when she boarded the train and this she begged the worker to take in part payment of her kindness.

The typical story of a prospective bridegroom who wandered frantically up and down the streets of Montreal seeking his fiancee who had come from England to meet him and had arrived a day too soon, is also told. When ocean liners arrive in port a day before they are due, many carefully laid plans are upset; and the disappointed bride, frightened at the thought of having to fend for herself in a strange country, often with little money and no idea of a safe lodging place, is not the least pathetic figure among them. Stories she has been told by fellow travellers on board of brides who arrived and waited in vain for the prospective groom to turn up, create doubts in the stoutest hearts.

On this particular occasion the girl's fiancee, as soon as he learned that her ship was expected early, wired her to stay on the boat until he arrived twenty-four hours later. However, the authorities refuse to allow the passengers to remain on board after the ship has reached port and she was placed in charge to the Y. W. worker by the conductress. The Traveller's Aid left word with various people as to the girl's whereabouts but when her fiancee arrived three hours later he could find no trace of her. For hours he tramped up and down the harborfront seeking a clue and it was not until he inquired at the telegraph office where a worker happened to meet him that the half-demented young man discovered that his bride was safe and sound. He broke down completely. Arangements were quickly made for the wedding and the Aid acted as bridesmaid once again.

A SIMPLE REMEDY FOR INDIGESTION

There's nothing complicated about the way REDMAC overcomes stomach trouble. It neutralizes the harmful acid that's doing the mischief, and does it instantly. With the stomach free from this acid, there's no chance of fermentation, and the digestive organs can do their work unhampered. The following extract from a letter is typical of many writen by grateful users

Redmac has saved me so much pain, and it is so nice to feel I can eat quite what I fancy instead of just plain food.

(Signed) A. SHEPHERD,

Rehearses Crimes Before His Mother

CHICAGO, Sept. 20.—Harvey W. Church, confessed slayer of Bernard Daugherty and Carl Ausnaus, automobile salesmen, early today was brought face to face with his mother for the first time since his arrest, and in her presence in the State Attorney's office, he repeated the details of the two crimes.

He revorted largely to the first of his many confessions and indicated, officials declared, that he planned and executed the murders without assistance.

Neither Clarence Wilder nor Milton Walker, named by Church as accomplices, officials said they had been convinced, had any part whatever in the crimes, and they also expressed doubt whether Leon Parks assisted Church, despite his detailed confession.

Officials pointed out that Parks stoutly maintained his innocence until contronted by Church, who then supplied most of the answers to questions put to Parks by the investigators.

Mrs. Church sat apparently unmoved today throughout her son's recital of the details of the murders.
