

Poor Stomach? Dyspepsia?

Fruit-a-tives" the Sure Remedy

MRS. O. MONETTE.
 ontreal, Que.—I hardly dared take "Fruit-a-tives," fearing my dyspepsia would vanish, but finally took two boxes. Now I eat well and recommend "Fruit-a-tives" to all my friends as the sure remedy for dyspepsia.

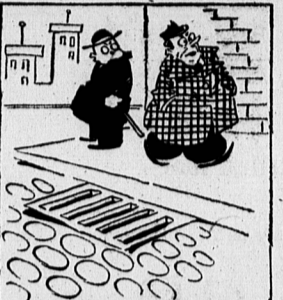

—Mrs. O. Monette.

is. Monette's grateful and honest letter proves that "Fruit-a-tives" quickly dis-indigestion. For nearly thirty years a wonderful medicine, a combination of intensified fresh fruit juices and tonics, has been stimulating lazy stomachs, wels and livers in a gentle, natural way. Get a box and try it. 25c and 50c all druggists.

SMILES

"A woman has been known to shoot a man for a hat."

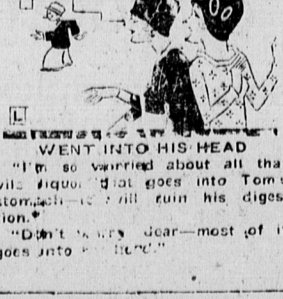

HAD NOT BEEN TAKING A DRINK
 Minister: I suspect you have been taking a drink, Mr. Brown. Church Member (coldly passing on): I'm an honest man, sir. I paid for my drink, as I always do.

WHERE SHE AGREES
 "Well, if you're gonna fuss with me all day I'm going out and take in a movie."
 "Well, just you wait a minute."
 "Why is there something else you want to say?"
 "No! I'm going to the movies with you."

She: "I'll tell your fortune for a quarter."
 He: "You've already told it."

WENT INTO HIS HEAD
 "I'm so worried about all that stock I bought that goes into Tom's stomach that it'll ruin his digestion."
 "Don't worry dear—most of it goes into his head."

"Jealous Hearts"

By MILDRED BARBOUR

Continued
 BY A TRICK OF CHANCE

Elinor's letter was typical of herself. It was written on odd sheets of note-paper, varied in size and color. It had neither salutation, nor signature; nor did it contain an apology for keeping the people who loved her waiting in anxiety for word of her safety and comfort.

"I ran into a great piece of luck," she had scrawled, in the hand she had always declared proclaimed her a future celebrity, because it was so completely illegible. "I'd hardly landed when I met the great Danelli. (I quote his own opinion of himself, of course.) He's taking me as a pupil, ahead of a few hundred aspirants for that honor—all of which makes me laugh! But, of course, I have to kid him along in the belief that I'm fairly over-come with the honor.

"I have a delightful apartment, too—in West Eleventh Street, just off Fifth Avenue—very bohemian. Danelli got it for me. An artist friend of his way going to Europe

... though she was disturbed at a foreigner, she also found a strange for six months and let me have his place. It saved me a lot of trailing around. Besides, it's no end artistic—really charming. Danelli insisted on my giving a house-warming. It was a great success. All the guests were friends of his."

The letter rambled on in this vein for several pages. There were many other references to Danelli, so many that Millicent became alarmed.

Was Elinor going to marry this Danelli?

Daniel Carver had had a particular aversion to marriages between Americans and foreigners, and he had endeavored to foster this antipathy in his two adopted daughters.

Millicent never questioned his opinions, but Elinor, always a rebel, had laughed behind his back, at the same time pretending acquiescence.

TO WOMEN OF MIDDLE AGE

Mrs. Wilson's Experience a Guide to Women Passing through the Change of Life

Hamilton, Ontario.—"I have taken several bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I cannot speak too highly of it as I was in the Change of Life and was all run-down and had no appetite. I was very weak and sick, and the pains in my back were so bad I could hardly move. I got very sad at times and thought I had not a friend on earth. I did not care if I lived or died. I was very nervous, too, and did not go out very much. A friend advised me to try a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, so I did. I am a farmer's wife, and always worked hard until lately, and was in bed for two months. I began to feel like a new woman after the first bottle and I recommend it with great success, also Lydia E. Pinkham's Liver Pills. I am willing to answer letters from women asking about your medicines, as I cannot speak too highly of them."

Bringing Up Father

"Let the poor old darling keep his ridiculous prejudices!" she had often said to Millicent. "Personally, I'm rather mad about foreign men. I've heard they all make love so divinely."

Millicent remembered that as she read and re-read Elinor's letter. Surely Elinor wouldn't accept so many favors from any man unless she expected to marry him. Especially from a foreigner. Millicent had always heard that foreign men misunderstood the frank friendliness of American girls.

But, though she was disturbed at the thought of Elinor's marrying a foreigner, she also found a strange relief in the mere suggestion. Elinor, if she married, would no longer endanger her own happiness with Tony!

She was instantly contrite at her own selfishness, and she struggled with herself for a long time before she decided to show Elinor's letter to Tony.

"Why am I letting him read it?" she asked herself. "Is it really because I'm worried about Elinor? Or is it because I want him to see that she's interested in, and probably engaged to, another man?"

Her heart answered her, but she closed her ears to its voice and sent for Tony to come over from Lynnhood. Tony was out on the hunting-field with his guests when she telephoned. It was not known just when he would return, so Millicent crossed the meadows between the two estates, carrying in her hand-bag Elinor's letter. It was enclosed in a sealed envelope on which she had written: "Please read this and tell me what you think of it. I'm rather upset. M."

Below her initial she had hesitantly added the word "love," but after a moment's reflection, she crossed it out. Very carefully. So that Tony couldn't, by any possibility, decipher what had been written there.

As she crossed the rolling meadows, fragrant with a breath of autumnal maturity, with goldenrod and life-everlasting brushing against her skirts, and grasshoppers leaping out of her path into the tall, sun-dried grass, she thought how happy she ought to be. All this gracious beauty belonged to her and Tony. Through the provisions of Daniel Carver's will, and through Tony's choice of her as a wife, she had been relieved of every worry as to material things. She was young, wealthy, and many said that she was a petulant little fool.

And yet, because of Elinor and something she had witnessed one moonlight night in a garden, she was, she told herself, the most wretched girl in the world.

"How silly I am!" she thought. "After all, I may be making a mountain out of a mole-hill. Married men do kiss other girls—I'm not so much of a fool as not to know that. And, perhaps, it can mean nothing. I must try to forget this horrible jealousy of the two people I love best in all the world."

The beauty of the autumn afternoon and the healing sunlight won her from her fears. By the time she had reached Lynnhood, she had determined to be happy. She had decided that she'd been acting like a petulant little fool.

None of the servants was in sight as she mounted the terrace. She strolled into the wide colonial hallway, gave a housewife's glance around to see whether the menage was running in orderly fashion during her absence, and was about to ring for the old butler to deliver her note to Tony into his keeping when her gaze happened to fall upon the table.

The morning mail, as yet undistributed, was lying there on a salver, awaiting the return of Tony and his guests from the hunt.

The topmost letter was addressed to Tony in Elinor's unmistakable scrawl! (To Be Continued.)

In Memoriam

MICHAEL MURPHY

The many friends of Michael Murphy, were grieved to hear of his death on April 7th, which took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Coady, North Wiltshire, where he was cared for the last seven years of his life. Deceased was 87 years of age and for many years Mr. Murphy lived at Kelly's Cross. There he was a greatly-loved and respected member of the community. Although he lived but a short time in North Wiltshire, he was held in high esteem by those who met him and this was shown by the large number of friends who gathered to pay tribute to his memory. He was attended in his last illness by Rev. P. S. McMahon, Kelly's Cross, and on April 9th his remains were conveyed by train to Kinkora, where he had lived 33 years. The remains were followed by a large concourse of friends and relatives to St. Malachias church, where High Mass was sung by Rev. Dr. M. J. Smith, P.P. There he was laid to rest side by side with his wife, who predeceased him seven years ago. May his soul rest in peace. There are left to cherish his memory, Mrs. William Coady, Wiltshire; Mrs. John Sturdy, Kelly's Cross; Mrs. James J. Smith, Kinkora; one son, John P. Charlottetown. The pall-bearers were: Messrs. James J. Smith, Wm. Cullins, Michael Coady, John Sturdy, Ezeagl Roberts, John McArvell.
