What a thrill! Many limbs all out; just believe it! You can gain 5, 10, 15 lbs. in 30 days! This is not a diet, it's a new way of eating. You can eat what you like, and still gain weight. It's the only way to gain weight. It's the only way to gain weight. It's the only way to gain weight.

(By Thornton W. Burgess)
While might alone does not make right,
It usually does win a fight.
—Old Mother Nature.

Mistress Autumn is in her way quite as lovely as sweet Mistress Spring. The latter comes robed in green of many shades and made lovely with flowers. She fills the air with perfume and the happy songs of many singers. She brings with her love and joy and dreams and many happy promises of what shall be.

Mistress Autumn is robed in bright gold, vivid scarlet, deep crimson and dark brown. Her beauty is almost too wonderful for belief. She too fills the air with perfume, the rich scent of ripened fruits. She brings in the promises of winter. Instead she fulfills the promises of Mistress Spring. She brings the joy of feasting and the sense of plenty, the feeling of well-being and contentment, the happiness of plans and dreams and hopes come true.

Jack Frost had pinched open the burrs on the beech trees and the Merry Little Breezes had shaken out the three-sided sweet little nuts for the furred and feathered folk who love them, and these are many in the Green Forest. So wherever these sweet little nuts were to be found in plenty there was sure to be found a party of Green Forest folk feasting on them or gathering them to store them away for future feasts. These were the thirty ones, the Squirrel folk. In one place where the nuts were most plentiful, were Lightfoot the Deer, Mrs. Lashfoot and their twins, Mrs. Bear and her twins, the Grouse family, the Squirrel cousins and others. It was quite party. Yes, sir, it was quite a party. Wouldn't you like to have been there to see it? Then Buster Bear arrived and never in his life had any one seen him in a worse temper. He had been kept up in a tree a long time by Jimmy Skunk. Then before he could get down Pricky Porky the Porcupine had kept him tree still longer. You see Buster Bear has the greatest respect for Jimmy's little scent gun and Pricky Porky's barbed little spears. So when he reached the happy party under the beech trees he was indignantly and promptly drove everybody away, even Mrs. Bear and the cubs. Even if he hadn't been feeling so ugly he probably would have driven the others away for he is naturally selfish. He thinks only of himself.

He wished he was somewhere else

From a safe distance the others watched him roving about among the leaves on the ground for the little beechnuts of which he is very fond. He felt better now. Seeing all the others take to their heels and wings when he rushed in among them had in part at least restored his self-respect, lost when he had been kept up in a tree by two folks so very much smaller than himself.

"I guess they know now who is boss of the Green Forest," he growled, talking to himself, sort of thinking aloud. "I'm not afraid of anybody in the Green Forest who will fight. No, sir, I'm not afraid of any one." He was trying to feel all around and listening. He had an uneasy feeling that he was being watched by some one whom he didn't see, and it wasn't one of those he had driven away.

He could feel those eyes. Yes, sir, he could feel them. It wasn't a pleasant feeling.

Slowly he looked on all sides, his ears cocked to catch any tell-tale sound. He was standing in a shadowy place where young trees grew rather close together. Then in startled dismay he saw dimly a great form in among the trees and instantly knew that it was Plathorn the Moose, the largest of the Green Forest folk, whom he had not seen for so long that he had forgotten all about him. Quite suddenly Buster felt less big than he had felt, and a lot less sure that he was boss of the Green Forest. He had a feeling that he was looking at trouble and an awful lot of it. He was sure of it when he heard a grunt from Plathorn, a grunt that had an ugly, threatening sound. He no longer thought of little sweet beechnuts. There and there he lost his appetite. He wished he was somewhere else. He wished he hadn't boasted. Perhaps if he pretended he hadn't seen Plathorn, didn't suspect he was near, Plathorn would take no notice of him, and he could slink away. Plathorn snorted. Buster jumped.

Contract Bridge

By Josephine Culbertson

Errors flew thick and fast throughout the following deal:

East dealer:
North-South vulnerable.

♠ 10 8 6 3	♥ 10 8 6 2	♦ 7 6 2	♣ 9 8 5 3
♠ 9	♥ 5 4 3	♦ A Q 7	♣ K 8 4
♠ A K J 10	♥ A 10 9 5	♦ A K J 7 5 2	♣ A 10 7 2

The bidding:
East South West North
4♥ 4♠ 5♥ 6♠
Pass Pass Double! Pass

On the surface, North's leap to six spades seems a bad bid, since it could have been beaten, and since the opposing heart contract could have been defeated by two tricks. Nevertheless, there was quite a lot to be said for North's decision—far more certainly, than for West's double of six spades. True, that contract was too high, but West was not in a position to know that, and it was perhaps as a rebuke that his "playing the prophet" that his fingers were led to a very bad opening lead—a low heart!

This was, in effect, a magnificent gift from West to South, but the latter, with the sort of courtesy which to be dispersed at the bridge table, returned the compliment! He discarded a diamond from dummy! After that, even though the missing diamond honors were on side, South had to lose a diamond trick and a club.

It is hard to say which was worse—West's opening lead, or South's discard from dummy on the first trick. Surely, a diamond or a club lead by West would have been more logical; and as for South's play—why discard a diamond, and then require both a club and a diamond finesse, when, by discarding a club, the slam would come home if only the diamond queen could be captured?
