BRITAIN WILL SEE BEST FRENCH FILMS

LONDON, Feb. 7 —(CP)—The best French films are to be shown throughout Britain as the result of negotiations between J. Arthur Rank, millionaire British movie magnate, and French producers.

Under the arrangement, the best British films will be distributed in France.

French films to be shown here will be synchronized with English dialogue instead of the present practice of sub-titling in English. E. T. Carr, managing director of the distributing firm of Eagle-Lion, stated that the first two French films to be distributed in Britain are Jean Cocteau's "Love Eternal" and the life sotry of Berlioz under the title "Symphonie Fantastique."

EASTBOURNE, England —(CP)—A 500-pound bomb which fell here five years ago was blown up recently. The bomb was fitted with a clockwork fuse which might have started by movement, and experts decided the best method of disposing of the bomb was to explode it.

Brookfield

The seed potato growers of this section are taking advantage of the open winter to ship their products. They are greatly handicapped by the shortage of cars. There was a good crop of the above in this vicinity and most of the cellars are still almost full of potatoes packed in sacks and ready for market.

One of our most progressive farmers, Mr F. C. Dollar is seriously ill in the P. E. I. Hospital. "Fred" is a good citizen and his friends all hope that he will soon be completely recovered and back with his family.

The school is making good progress under the efficent management of the teacher, Mr. Wendell Horton. During the Christmas holidays the schoolroom was furnished with new up to date seats and desks and the future of this school appears to be very promising.

Gunner Reginald P. Wood was given a warm reception by his friends and neighbors when he recently arrived home after about five years' service in England, Italy, France and Holland. He was presented with an address and purse. "Reggie" is one of our best and richly deserves all he received. Another reception was given Private Ovid Dollar. He was also presented with an address and purse. Ovid is a fine young fellow who saw active service in Italy, France and Holland. One sad feature of Ovid's case is that he is still awaiting the arrival of his bonnie English bride who on account of inadequate transportation facilities has not yet joined him here.

There was an outbreak of scarlet fever here but owing to the care taken by those infected the disease was confined to two families, all the members of which are on the road to recovery.

The Brookfield lads are very much interested in hockey. The boys appear to be improving as Captain Ralph Cruwys has led his team to victory on the last three games played by them.

THE BIBLE: Twice-blessed is the receiver of a gift, if he can share it with others. "Thy Word" says the psalmist" is a lamp unto my feet and a light unto my path." EVERY CITY needs a strong, powerful group of men who know its needs to direct its operations. In a period following a war of the proportions of the late conflict this is particularly important to the welfare of a community. During the present election campaign Charlottetown is fortunate in having a representative group of Businessmen with sufficient interest in the well being of the city to offer themselves as nominees for the mayoralty and the City Council. Let us elect them and benefit from their experience. 2-9-11.

INTEREST in the present election campaign in this city is running high because a 'slate' of nominees has been named from among the most influential business men in Charlottetown. They have offered to aid this community by lending their efforts to making it a better place in which to live. Let us show our appreciation by electing Daniel Noonan, Walthen Gaudet, Gordon MacDonald, Picton McCormac, George Ryan, David Stewart, Alban Farmer to the City Council and Keith Rogers as mayor. Charlottetown needs them in office now. 2-9-11.

CHAPTER XXX

Oh, why didn't the plane go faster? And until morning — so many hours!

Virginia sat tense as a strung wire, every nerve tuned, desperately sending out vibrations to Mike. I'm coming — I'm coming — on my knees — and all this that we quarrelled about is so pitifully unimportant, so shamefully small. Love is what matters — and I did pick it to pieces, looking for flaws, when there were so many flaws in my own heart.

She was out of the plane almost before the steps were let down. She looked around frantically for a taxi and started running when some one called, "Here, Virginia."

It was Bruce Gamble. He came hurrying up, took her bag from her hand. "Mary thought you might come in on this plane, so I waited. My car's over here."

"Oh, thank you, Bruce. I am in a hurry. I have to go to Florida as soon as possible in the morning. Mikes there — he's sick. I must go. Will you take me to the office, please? There are some things I can do there tonight — so I can get away early."

"So he's in Florida? And you're going?"

"Yes, I'm going, Bruce. Nothing else is important — except that I'm going to Mike. Will you take me to the office?"

"I'll take you to the office — and then," he said steadily, "I'll take you to Florida."

"Oh, but Bruce — I have to fly to Florida. I have to get there quickly. Mike may be — terribly ill." She choked a little and thrust away the gray fear that had haunted her all the way from New York.

"You can fly. Have you forgotten that I fly a plane? And I have one ready — the plane that we use on long, quick trips. I was planning to leave in it early tomorrow, for Mexico. That's how I happened to be out here—and then I thought you might be coming I wanted to see you again, so I waited."

"Bruce, you're too good to me. But — I can't leave very early. I have to wait till the bank opens. I have to have some money. Mike may need — a lot of things. I don't know what I'll find when I get there"

"I can take care of that, too," he said. "I'll lend you some money. Will five hundred be enough? You can send it back to me later."

"Bruce, if you go on making things easy for me I don't think I can bear it. I'm ashamed enough now."

"You'd do it for me, wouldn't you, if I were in trouble — if you could help me, wouldn't you do it?"

"Oh, yes, but—"

"You think that because I fell in love with you—and I'm not promising to get over that very quickly — that I should forget how to be a friend?"

"I think you're the finest person I know, Bruce," she said sincerely.

It was nearly morning when she arrived at the airport. Bruce was there, loading equipment and baggage into a small cabin plane, and with him was another quiet young man, dressed in flying clothes.

"This is Parke Harford," Bruce said. "We're flying together. Mexico first — then perhaps California, Texas, Oklahoma — wherever they're hunting for oil."

She saw the sun come up over the sand hills of Carolina, and with the growing golden light her heart lightened, too. Then farther south a gray sea of cloud thickened below them, and rain began to rattle on the low wings like shot, streaking past the windows. In all the world only herself and those two bent leather-covered heads in front of her. Heavy thoughts returned to torture her.

What if Mike looked at her again with anger and distaste in his face? What if he did not want her any more? And here a still more bitter idea intruded — had Bruce Gamble counted on something like that? Was he doing this to cure her, show her how hopeless it was?

"I must be horrible — to be thinking things like this!"

Warm day broke upon them, over the pine woods of Georgia. Bruce turned and grinned at her, his eyes hidden behind his goggles, pointed with a gesturing arm toward the eastern horizon, where a low feather of grayness drifted.

"Ship," he shouted over the roar of the engines. "Going south."

Going south! A hundred miles an hour—and faster — she was going south. Work forgotten, everything forgotten except that she was going to Mike. She sent a sort of wireless message to brave Harriet Hillery. "I will hold him —and I will set him free. He'll be mine—and he'll be free!"

With waning afternoon, the patterned terrain of groves and highways and little towns was lost in a jade-green vastness dotted with lost lakes, cut with canals. The airport was a gray cross upon a vague field of green. She let herself fall with the plane, down swiftly like an arrow.

Bruce got down stiffly, pulled off his headgear, reached up a hand to her. "I'll wait, Virginia," he said. "You'll have to take a bus from this point—or a car. If you want me to get a car and drive you down—"

She shook her head. "No, Bruce, I have to go alone."

"But I'll wait here till you learn how things are," he insisted.

"Don't wait, Bruce. Please don't wait. I don't want anything behind me — unfinished, waiting — when I go."

"I see. But I'd rather be sure—"

"I'm sure. I'll make it sure. And thanks for everything —more than I can ever tell you. I owe you now more than I can ever pay."

"Let me keep the debt, Virginia. Let me keep that much," he said. "It's all I'll have."

"Good-by, Bruce. Good-by, good friend."

"Good-by — and good luck."

The car that carried her south rattled and swayed. They passed little towns, lighted and bright, and then the car swung off the highway into a shell road, narrow, with a deep, dark stripe of water on each side and bushes leaning in close. She smelled salt mud and fish and the brinier freshness of open water And then there were a gate and a light — windows in a golden pattern, and the car stopped with a squeal of brakes.

A woman in slacks came down some steps, carrying a flashlight.

"I'm Mrs. Paull,' Virginia told her. "Is my husband—"

"Oh 2 that writer?" said the woman. "Yes, he's here. He's upstairs — first door to the left. You going to stay?"

"Yes, I'm going to stay. Till he's well again."

And then she was going up the stairs. A wooden door, standing open — dimness beyond, the pale outline of a bed, the pale mound of a quiet shape—.

Her throat tightened. Her voice was little more than a croak. "Mike?"

"There was a wild unpheaval and two bare feet were flung in air, and then swung over the edge of the bed. Mike sat up, all his hair standing out around his face, his flushed, swollen face.

"Ginny!" It was a breathy rasp. "Ginny!" he said again and held out his hands.

She flew and gathered him close, his arms reached for her, his hot fingers moved over her face.

"Mike — I didn't know — I came —as fast as I could."

He leaned against her weakly He was like a child in her arms.

"I — didn't think you'd come, Ginny. I didn't think you'd come!"

"I'm here, Mike. I'll take care of you Lie down now — you're so weak—"

"I'm not weak, just a little malaria — I've had it before. I just — got tired — and I didn't care what happened to me — and then the bug bit me. I — you came, Ginny — you came!"

All that had been — all the doubts and uncertainty — all were ended The darkness tock them, the warm wind carried them away. This was Mike—her lover, cracked lips trying to smile, fevered breath on her face, hot arms holding her —this was heaven.

"I'll take care of you, Mike—and then we'll go home."

"I'll be all right tomorrow — doc gave me some shots — the devil, Ginny, I'm well now!"

"Not quite well, darling, but you'll get strong now."

"Strong — feel that grip? I'm strong. And I'll be well tomorrow —see if I'm not. I knew I'd be all right if you come, but I thought you wouldn't want to come — I thought you were sick of me—"

"Oh, Mike, we've been so silly —and so blind!"

"Don't go, Ginny. Don't let go my hand. "I'll never let you go. Never any more. Wherever I go, you're going with me. I've been through hell, Ginny—without you!"

Wherever I go — she saw them then, the far horizons, the strange, wild places — and Mike would go. She sighed a little and then drew a long breath and flung back her head. "All right, Mike," she said. "Get well first. And when do we start?"

He sat up, shaking back his rumpled hair. He grinned, and in the dim room the grin was like a torch lighted. He said, "Ginny, Angel — let's go tomorrow, if the doc will let us. Ginny, I'm sick of this place. I've been here — a thousand years. A thousand awful years! I'm sick of it — I never want to see this place again. It's just another mulberry bush. And you know, I never did like mulberries!"

DESIGNERS' SOCIETY GIVES SPRING SHOW

LONDON, Feb. 7 —(CP)—Important changes are shown in the 1946 spring dress collections which were opened in London, recently by the Society of London Fashion Designers.

Sloping shoulders take the place of square ones on the very formal dresses in the first three collections shown by Hardy Amies, Charles Creed, and Victor Stiebel, all of whom have just been demobilized from the forces. The silhouette becomes a pyramid in the Amies collection, harrow at the shoulders, wide at the skirt hem.

Hips are padded and artificial even on tailored suits, which alone keep their broad shoulders with waists very narrow. Dinner and evening dresses show an 18th century influence with very wide skirts and closely fitting bodices with low decolletage only in front. Stiebel shows a very similar evening line with off-the-shoulder decolletages and victorian wool embroidery used as stomachers on dinner dresses.

Jackets of many afternoon suits are padded over the hips like the skirts and also break into fullness below the waist, especially at the back. Tiny, pink ostrich feathers are sewn all over a black velvet full skirt gown as rimming. Charles Creed lowers the waist line and makes jackets to wear without blouses since he says woman rarely take their jackets off today.

There are bold tweeds in stripes or checks from Cumberland and Scotland, much rayon satin and rayon tie silk (hitherto used only for men's ties) and some cottons. Notable are printed cottons and diaphanous sea island cottons, both used for evening dresses with striped cottons (processed like crepe de chine) for blouses.

FOR COUGHS COLDS- YOU CAN'T BEAT BUCKLEY'S MIXTURE

Ever Try Making Cough Syrup in Your Kitchen?

Gives Quick Relief. And It's So Easy! No Cooking.

If you've never tried mixing your own cough medicine, you've missed a lot. It's no trouble—needs no cooking —and gives you about four times as much cough syrup for your money. You'll say it is splendid for coughs due to colds. Here's how it's done:—

Make a plain syrup by stirring 2 cups of granulated sugar and one cup of water a few moments, until it is dissolved. Or you can use corn syrup or liquid honey, instead of sugar syrup.

Get 2½ ounces of Pinex from your druggist. Put this into a 16 oz. bottle and fill up with your syrup. Thus you make 16 ounces—a family supply. It tastes fine and never spoils. Children love it.

And as for results, you'll find it very satisfying. It goes right to work on the cough, loosening the phlegm, soothing the irritation, and helping clear the air passages. You will like it for its results, and not merely for the money it saves.

Pinex is a special compound of proven ingredients, in concentrated form, a most reliable agent for soothing throat and bronchial irritations. Money refunded if it doesn't please you in every way.
