

Give relief BECAUSE IT IS ALL BRAN!

Relief from constipation, whether it be mild or chronic, will follow the regular, every-day eating of Kellogg's Bran. We have thousands of letters from former sufferers who tell us that the natural "bulk-action" of this wonderful cereal product has given relief they have not known for years. We guarantee that Kellogg's Bran will free the system from constipation because it is ALL BRAN—not a compound in which bran is added. If constipation is to be permanently relieved, you must eat ALL BRAN—that's why your physician will recommend Kellogg's for constipation.

Constipation creates toxic conditions which poison the blood and every organ of the body. It slows down mentally and physically, and creates sick headaches, nausea, bad breath, pimples—finally, in many cases, leading to Bright's disease, diabetes and other dreaded illnesses. You must fight constipation with Kellogg's Bran regularly if you want health!

You'll say Kellogg's Bran is really delicious—it has a nut-like flavor that appeals to the most fastidious appetite. Eat it as a cereal, sprinkled on hot or cold cereals or cooked with hot cereals, allowing two tablespoons of bran for each person. Be certain to eat at least two tablespoons each day; as much with each meal in chronic cases. Kellogg's is delicious made into muffins, macaroons, raisin bread, griddle cakes. Recipes in every package. Kellogg's Bran is served by leading hotels, clubs and restaurants in individual packages. It is sold by all grocers.

"THE LOVE PENDULUM"

BY MARION RUBINCAM

ARGUMENT
Chapter 21

We rang the bell of our own house as though we were uttering a word of warning to the strangers. And Parker answered the door and let us in, and it was still as though we had come to call at a new house. Parker was too scared, or too nervous, to smile a welcome.

She assumed the solemn, important manner of one conducting a funeral and led the way into the hall. She even regarded me with the kind and sympathetic manner that one might use in looking upon the chief mourner. It began to affect my nerves immediately.

Two women were in our living room. Aunt Harriet sat erect in the one big armchair. Win's mother was hunched up, trying to look at ease, in the most uncomfortable seat in the room.

I suppose it was an amusing tableau, but then I was not ready to see it. Aunt Harriet had so well the air of taking the best of the poor little dwelling afforded, of being hideously uncomfortable, but too much a martyr to politeness to say so. And she had our best chair too! Whereas Mrs. Taylor, who really must have been suffering physical discomfort in the wooden chair, had the air of pathetically making the best of it, and of trying to be cheerful at the same time. Afterwards I wondered what those two ever talked about.

Win and I stood in the door, and I still felt like a naughty child.

"Why Aunt Harriet, it's sweet of you to come," I murmured mechanically, to break the awful silence.

"It is," Aunt Harriet said. "There was no one to meet me, I had to find this place by myself with an imbecile taxi man—jibney man, he called himself."

"I'm so glad you got here safely," I murmured again, crossing the room and kissing her. She presented a very cold cheek.

"This is my husband," I went on, putting a hand around to hug Win. By that time I needed physical as well as mental support.

Aunt Harriet turned to him, leaving me for a moment—a moment I took advantage of to go over and kiss Mrs. Taylor.

Win saved the situation.

"You needn't pretend you're glad to see me, Mrs. Bennett," he said. "I know just how you feel, I feel the same in your place."

Famous Hoaxes
(By Dominion News Service)

LONDON, July 9.—It is not only the simple man in the street who falls a victim to the scientific hoax. Many a professor has been pulling 'layman in search of amusement'.

One of the most pathetic cases was that of Professor John B. A. Beringer, of the University of Wurzburg, who lived just before the true nature of fossils was discovered. Like the rest of his colleagues, he held them to be fragments of nature.

Seeing how keen he was on collecting them some of his waggish students carved fake fossils out of soft limestone and managed to hide them in places where he was digging. Great was his enthusiasm over these finds. After long and patient study he produced a learned book, describing them in Latin, plates.

Then the "leg-pulling" students gave the show away. Poor Professor Beringer managed to buy back most of the first edition, but it cost him all that he had. He died in poverty and sorrow.

American has provided some of the most famous scientific hoaxes. Notable among them was the Keely motor hoax, when over 100,000 dollars were raised—much of it among scientists—to launch a new force so much more powerful than steam that by dint of proper manipulation a single quart of water could be induced to yield 1,500 h. p. of energy. The inventor's apparatus was a baffling tangle of pistons and tubes and rods and boilers.

To-day suspicion he finally asked Professor Marks and Barker, of the University of Pennsylvania, to examine it at a public test, slipping in a mysterious pipe at the last moment, and this they found to be a reservoir of compressed air, which was what put all the "pep" into the contraption.

American naval and journalistic circles still remember "Professor" Wingard and his "mysterious means of blowing up a ship five miles away by means of 'rays'." After a convincing demonstration off New Orleans, in the presence of many scientific men, the inventor raised a large sum of money and repeated the performance off Boston next year.

This time, however, things went wrong, and it was the two employees in the little boat charged with destroying the distant schooner who blew up. (Wingard himself was in safety on a steam launch.)

His "invention" was merely a skillful hiding of dynamite on the victim ship, and the subsequent current sent along a wire previously laid in the dead of night by accomplices in a row-boat.

"At least you are frank," Aunt Harriet said, and I felt as though I had gained a little advantage. "I shan't try to be polite or even conventional. I've been sitting here two solid days, while you—you—"

"While I was running off with your niece?" Win said. "I know how angry you are, I don't blame you. Only you would have done the same thing in my place."

He went over to kiss his mother. Somehow I felt he had the advantage again. There's no way to be angry at a person who admits his fault!

"You might have waited until I came, at least."

"But you see, if I had, you might have taken her off to New York." Win delivered this with a charming smile. He was, as he said later, "making the wind from her sails," and she felt it: It made her angrier because it took away all her arguments.

"I should certainly have taken her back to New York with me," she said. "I shall do that anyway—tomorrow, since there's no train to-night."

"But—" I began.

Then I stopped, catching her glance. Aunt Harriet could always freeze me to my marrow which she drew herself up in that manner.

She was a very handsome woman, this Mrs. Bradley Bennett. She was, as her friends said, "one of the Bennetts." I never in my life met those who were merely Bennetts, so I never knew what the difference between a Bennett and the Bennett was. It gave me nothing that I could recognize, but it did give Aunt Harriet a superb bearing. She was very tall, too tall, but she had overcome this fault by learning to carry herself beautifully. She once had red hair; it was white now and always exquisitely marcelled. She had kept her lovely skin and she had kept her slender, young figure. She dressed to perfection, wearing only certain colors, that she knew become her—soft greens, a great deal of black and white, a certain brick dust red, a very dull shade that she used sparingly. It was very clever of her, for when one saw these shades, one thought of Mrs. Bradley Bennett.

And she affected long necklaces, of strange colored stones and not other jewelry, but her wedding ring. Win had crossed the room again, and stood in front of her.

"I'm sorry you have any idea of going tomorrow, much less of taking Constance," he said quietly. "We hoped you would stay with us for awhile."

"Well," Aunt Harriet gasped at the word. "And pray, where did you both of you, expect to put me in this 'bandbox'?"

"The house is too small," Win agreed apologetically. "But my mother has plenty of room, and as her home is still mine, I thought you would do me the honor of staying there."

I gasped then, at his enormous courage. I watched these two with fascination.
