FOR AND AGAINST THE AUTOMOBILE

time they wanted to guard even the unfounded fears of the people as much as possible. But they were to regard serious things more seriously. The speaker remembered how, when the bicycle first came into use, stage-drivers carried a ball attached to cord for the purpose of throwing it at the bicycle. The hateful thing scared the horses. But all that passed and the bicycle remained.

The speaker urged them not to put themselves in line with those who opposed improvements because they perhaps saw some little disadvantage. One gentleman had said that they used the motor car for every other purpose than to drive a carriage along the road. Why? There was nothing more fearful about a motor placed in a carriage than upon a farm. As to horses being afraid, perhaps the old horse might be, but the colts would treat the motor cars as naturally as anything else and would get accustomed to them. They had to get through the period of scare, and they would have to get through the scare that afflicted the men. (Laughter.)

Finally, concluded, the Premier, he would say that the Government were anxious—and there was no person more anxious than he was himself—that the things that were best in the interests of the province should be done. If an error was made it was unintentional. He did not disregard the opinions of any of the gentlemen, who might differ very widely in their views. The Government would guard with the greatest care not only what they believed to be the true interest of the people but also, as far as they could, the unfounded fears of some of their friends. He thought it was a very good thing for so many of them to have gathered together. He had never heard so many speeches so utterly void of offence and so apt to the point as had been given that day, and he was very much pleased with the meeting.

BLIND MUSICIANS MUCH HONORED IN JAPAN.

It is recorded that when the Japanese Emperor Koko paid a visit to a certain place he was received by a company of blind men, whose condition much moved the compassion of his majesty. Not long after this the emperor gave orders that a row of tenements should be constructed in Kyoto, where the homeless blind might find shelter; and the blind were thenceforth ranked as a separate class, entitled to special privilege.

Upon the death of the Emperor Koko, hundreds of blind men and women flocked into the capital to express their sorrow and to pay a last tribute of respect to the great monarch who so earnestly befriended them. It was not unnatural that the anniversary of the emperor's death should have become the blind man's holiday; and even to this day the numerous blind in the Land of the Rising Sun are accustomed to visit the old capital to celebrate it, offering prayers before the imperial shrine.

Since that time it has been the custom to the Kuga family, who are the decendants of the Emperor Koko, and represented by the present Marquis Kuga to confer on all blind persons who have visited the Kyoto shrine four times the rank known as shibu. When one holding this rank had attended the annual service four times he was raised to a still higher rank known as yodo. A blind man of this rank attending four times reached the rank of sokoto, on the same conditions, became a kengyo, the latter being of the same rank as a Buddhist bishop or the abbot of a monastery. Moreover there were three ranks under each of the above mentioned grades, or sixteen in all.

In the reign of the Emperor Suka there is mention of a blind man named Akasi who was a skilled flute player, and was invited to play before the emperor, when his majesty was so pleased that he raised the musician to the rank of so-kengyo, which means arch-bishop. This famous blind musician was also made much of by the ashikaga family.

In the time of the Emperor Gokomatsu there was another blind musician named Takenaga, upon whom the emperor bestowed the purple robe of a Buddhist priest of the highest rank. In the Tokugawa period, between the years 1688 and 1703, there lived in Hiitotsume (one-eye) Yedo a noted blind man named Sugiyama, who won his estate and its name by asking the shogun to give him one of his eyes when pressed to make any request he desired and it would be granted.

This was the first blind man raised to high rank by the shogun, much honor up to that time having been the prerogative of the imperial house alone. After that it was arranged that the ranking of the blind was to be divided between the emperor and the blind in the 33 provinces of the south, and the shogun those in the 97 provinces of the north. The Tokugawa bakufu increased the number of ranks to which the blind could be raised to 33, including all those already mentioned.

"SUFFS" WILL ACT.

Arrange to take part in performance at New York Hippodrome to help the cause.

The belated advent of real winter has had a stimulating effect upon the attendance at the scenic spectacle "America" at the New York Hippodrome and is operating to keep the eceipts up to the happy high standard that the early part of the season and the holiday period established.

The snappy atmosphere sends out-of-town visitors, who otherwise might be viewing the out-door wonders of New York scurrying for shelter. The Hippodrome is the traditional camping ground of the visitor within the gates and the individual allurements of the current attraction have served to emphasize that condition, with gratifying results to the management and cast.

A new element of novelty will beckon the visitor during the coming week in the presence of many of the wealthiest, best known and handsomest leaders of the Woman Suffrage movement on the stage. Three branches of the Woman Suffrage Party, New York City, New York State and New Jersey, will hold demonstrations and give benefit performances during the week The two former are dividing Monday and Tuesday, and in addition to making street parades in Fifth Avenue and elsewhere, will participate in the performance of the spectacle "America".

Fifty selected suffragettes—each a beauty—will take part in every performance, marching in the stage parade and participating in the scene depicting a suffrage demonstration. The banners of their organizations have long been in use on the Hippodrome stage, but this will be the initial appearance of the leaders of the movement upon the stage.

Among those who will have their debut on this occasion will be:

General Rosalie Jones
Mrs. Innes Milholland Boissivain
Colonel Ida Craft
Corporal Martha Klatchken
Mrs. R. M. Griffin

and thirty other prominent women who are working for 'the cause".

Following the New York City and New York State demonstration the suffragettes of New Jersey will have possession of the huge house on Wednesday, and will then undertake to show what the President's tate is doing for "the cause".

The identity of the New Jersey leaders in the movement who will participate in the stage performance has not been made public as yet.

BERLIN, March 31.— Another mysterious Crown Prince "incident" has arisen in connection with the sudden abandonment of his Highness' projected trip to the colonies in Africa in June. The Tageliche Rundschau, which enjoys first rate sources of information in military quarters, states that the abandonment is due to the Kaiser's refusal to sanction the Reichstag bill for defrayment of expenses. 'The Empesor's action was taken last week on the eve of departure for Corfu. The exact reasons are unknown.

FEMININE FEAR OF MICE.

(New York Times.)

Once more there is an excuse for asking how much of sincerity there is in the fear of mice to which so many women give vehement expression. A night telephone operator over in New Jersey saw one of the lettle creatures steal out on the floor of the room in which she was keeping her lonely vigil, and, though his attack was not on her, but on the crumbs of her luncheon, she promptly fainted. On recovery she rushed into a closet, where she was imprisoned till morning by the spring catch on the hastily-slammed door. Meanwhile all efforts to "call central" were in vain and the snowstorm received many undeserved objurgations.

Yet this young woman, like all others, knows that mice are perfectly harmless— that they never did hurt anybody and never will.

The wicked suggestion has been made that feminine outcries on the appearance of mice are a mere fashion or habit, inveterate now, but originating in nothing better than a desire to show an interesting sensitiveness and timidity and to give rescuing man a chance to show his superiority. There must be something more to it than that, however, for not a few women, even when quite alone, as this one was, manifest almost convincing indications of this fear, perhaps not the less real because so unnecessary.

Apparently the fear is instinctive, but nothing is ancestrial history explains the instinct, since in the line of mothers running back through the troglodytes to merely anthropoid forebears, never a one was devoured by a mouse and not more than half a dozen in all can have been bitten by one. And instincts are not easily made.

ECONOMY IN CUTTING BREAD.

A successful boarding house keeper cuts all kinds of bread and cake in very small pieces. There is always plenty of each placed on the dining room table, and each person can take as many pieces as are needed. The waste of broken pieces of bread and cake on the individual plates is thereby greatly lessened, and the untouched pieces on the serving plates could be utilized for toast and pudding.

In even a small family this plan might be pursued to advantage, for it is the habit of many persons to take a large piece of bread and eat only a small part of it.
