Revolution Improbable In Germany

But Serious Food Shortage Would Bring Uprising Quickly, Swedish Newsman Thinks.

STOCKHOLM, March 26 — (AP) — Revolution from below still looks highly improbable in Germany, unless starvation drives the people into the streets or a beaten army floods back in a state of disintegration.

The first signs of a real collapse of the Nazi food system will cause more panic in Germany than the worst military defeat. So far the German food rationing and supply systems have functioned extremely well although rations have been short, particularly fats.

But Allied bombing of food factories and storehouses and the crippling of the transport system plus the loss of Germany's richest agricultural lands in the east have changed the situation. The Germans now associate the duration of the war with the food supply.

"The war will end," Berliners say, "when Goering can put on Goebbels' trousers."

No Flowers In Germany

(A new German order forbids the planting of flowers even for use in cemeteries. The Berlin correspondent of the Stockholm newspaper Dagens Nyheter reported Sunday that parks and sports fields were being plowed under throughout the country for the planting of potatoes and vegetables. The dispatch said officials estimated that each square kilometre of land in the Reich now must support 304 persons instead of 147.)

Although foreign agents have attempted to form so-called troicas after the Baltic pattern—groups of three men each as a basic cell for a wider resistance movement—it was not until the Red Army invaded Germany that Berliners began inquiring of one another about the chances of joining an "organization."

Ever since Hitler came into power the German people have been used to the organized rationing of food. Heretofore food has been adequate while strictly controlled, but now supplies are deteriorating rapidly. The giant evacuation from the east was stopped because of the shortage of food within Germany proper.

After the Vistula retreat the first thing done in Berlin was to stretch eight weeks rations to nine.

Rationing Breaks Down

The first serious breach of the rationing discipline occurred with well-informed party men and wholesalers informing one another secretly of extra sales several days before the public was notified. As a result when the public lined up all the best things were gone.

When the Russians reached the Oder and Berliners thought the capital might be besieged within hours they suddenly found tradesmen no longer had anything to sell.

On the following day goods reappeared. This was the most serious sign of disintegration on the rationing front. When everything begins to collapse and the people of Berlin see nothing ahead but siege or flight, then not even the strictest measures by authorities will prevent the remaining stocks from vanishing among relatives, friends and favorite customers. The less fortunate faced with starvation will take to the streets in search of food.

ISLAND TUBERS—

Reference was also made to plowing matches and the exhibition at Egmont Bay.

Short courses in handicrafts were progressing favorably, Mr. Stewart reported. There is always a waiting list to attend these courses with one unfortunate exception. That is the course in general agriculture. This does not seem to be popular and the department has not been able to get classes in this course for some years. The blacksmithing course was well attended, and was one of the most valuable on the list.

"A tunnel across Northumberland Strait may come in course of time, but it will be a very expensive project," Mr. Stewart said. "With the development of great transport planes after the war, we may see box cars transported by air, and neither tunnel nor causeway will enter into the picture."

He commended Island farmers for working so hard under wartime difficulties, and said they were the only workers among whom one would not find strikers.

Ontario Election In May, June Probable

TORONTO, March 25 — (CP) — A second wartime election for Ontario, probably in May or June, was assured Saturday by sudden dissolution of the Legislature following by two days the defeat of the Progressive Conservative Government.

Announcing the dissolution, Premier Drew said the election will be held as soon as arrangements can be made for taking the vote of overseas servicemen.

Premier Drew said his government had sought to avoid a provincial election "while our lads at the front are locked in mortal combat with a desperate enemy."

It would, however, be "contrary to constitutional practice" for the government to seek further support from a legislature which had voted non-confidence. The Premier charged that "by every possible device, each of the opposition groups impeded the business of the legislature and made it impossible to proceed with important government business."

Two party leaders immediately protested the dissolution move, which nullified a C.C.F. motion, passed unanimously, that the House adjourn until Tuesday for further business.

C.C.F. leader E. B. Jolliffe, opposition leader, charged the Premier had "deliberately plunged Ontario into a general election by asking and obtaining dissolution when it is neither necessary nor desirable."

A. A. MacLeod, chief of the two-man Labor-Progressive group, called the Premier's decision to dissolve the House "an act of political cowardice" and "a usurpation of the supremacy of parliament."

TIMELY TIPS

A dose of sulphur and molasses used to be a remedy for the loggy tired, end-of-winter feeling that hits most of us these days, and from a nutritional point of view, says Ann Burns, assistant to Chief Nutritionist Grace Duggan of the Health Department's nutrition division.

"To increase one's pep the main thing is to increase one's intake of iron and vitamine B1—both found in molasses—but liver is nutritionly tops here because it contains both in larger quantities," she told the Canadian Press.

Important vitamine B1 is found in meats, milk, green vegetables and whole-grain cereals, while iron comes mainly in darker coloured foods like egg yolks, red meats and especially liver, and also in whole grain cereals.

Molasses tops the sugar foods in nutritive value, contributing calories to the diet, plus worth-while amounts of calcium, iron and B-complex vitamines, but, says Dr. L.B. Pett, director of nutrition, present-day molasses is neither so dark nor so nutritious as old-time black-strap.

A day's menu containing plenty of vigour-giving iron and B1 might include these foods; At breakfast a glass of orange juice, a bowl of whole-grain cereal like rolled oats, possibly with wheat-germ sprinkeld on top, a poached egg on toast made from Canada approved bread and coffee for the adult members, milk for the children.

Lunch or supper: Cream of tomato soup, fresh fruit salad, Canada approved bread and butter, gingerbread for dessert and milk.

Dinner: Pork chops, baked potatoes, buttered greens, stewed dried fruit (prunes or figs), and oatmeal cookies, milk, tea, or coffee.

Newsman Describes Great Fury Of Rhine Attack

By ROSS MUNRO

WITH THE CANADIANS ON THE RHINE, March 25—(CP Cable)—Never since D-day last June 6 has there been anything like the British Rhine crossing. For the concentrated fury of attack, the operation eclipses the Normandy landings.

British troops gained the first foothhold and the first Canadian regiment across was the Highland Light Infantry of Canada, Galt, Ont. With them in the bridgehead now are the Stormont, Dundas and Glengarry Highlanders, Cornwall, Ont., and the North Nova Scotia Highlanders, Amherst and Truro, N.S.

From an observation point west of the river I watched the crossing through the haze, smoke and dust curtaining the river. There was no enemy shelling at their particular crossing point.

Before the British crossing Friday night, red and white tracer bullets and shells latticed the Rhine for miles. British officers called it their "pepper pot."

At 9 p.m. under a three-quarters moon the 51st Division shoved off in Buffalos—amphibious armored vehicles.

"I saw the Black Watch slog down the flat road to a dike where they got into the Buffalos. In the background somewhere the inevitable skirl of pipers was heard amid the gunfire.

Canadian highland infantry dug in along the hedges running through the gun lines and later they made their crossing.

At 9:06 p.m. the Black Watch flashed a message back that they were ashore without much opposition.

A British general directing the battle from an observation post, turned with a smile of deep satisfaction: "The British are across the Rhine."

Meanwhile as the Canadians jumped ashore shortly after dawn on the flat, marshy dikeland, British and Canadian artillery pounded the German-held areas on the east bank and around the bridgehead perimeter in a terrific barrage.

Maj. Maurice Clennett, Halifax, is second in command of the North Nova Scotias and company commanders are: Majors Don Learment, Truro, Lloyd Winhold, Tavistock, Ont., Dave Dickson, Fredericton, N.B., Captains Jack Fairweather, Rothsay, N.B., and Bob Graves, London, Ont.

Queen's Canadian Fund News

Bomb Victims Aided Through Women's Institutes

The General Secretary of the National Federation of Women's Institutes, the Hon. Francis Farrer, has expressed the warmest gratitude to the Queen's Canadian Fund for a gift of one hundred pounds recently made to the Women's Institutes War Distress Fund for the purpose of immediate and direct relief to civilian victims of enemy attack in southern England.

Miss Farrer writes:

"It is with deep gratitude that I write to acknowledge the most welcome donation of £100 from the Queen's Canadian Fund. I shall at the earliest opportunity report this kind gift to my Committee, but I know that they would wish me to write immediately to express their sincere thanks.

"This donation came most opportunely as our War Distress Fund has been practically expended; recently on account of the V-1 and V-2 attacks we have had many cases to help in country districts, and I am afraid that for quite a little while there will continue to be calls upon the Fund.

"Up to date, grants from the Fund have been made to blitzed families in the counties of Suffolk, Essex, Hertfordshire, Kent, Surrey, Sussex and Devonshire. Mostly the grants have been given out in small amounts to enable members to buy necessities when setting up their new homes after bomb damage.

"They have one and all been greatly touched by the thought behind the gifts we have received from Canada."

Through Canada, the women of the country-side support the Queen's Canadian Fund through the Women's Institutes. Many Institutes have adopted the Queen's Canadian Fund as a special objective in their war effort and large numbers of donations have been made.
