Following its recent announcement of "total blockade" of English waters, the German government warned the U. S. that it could not be responsible for the safety of the U.S. Army transport American Legion, above. The ship recently left Petsamo Finland, with 1100 war refugees. Among them are Crown Princess Martha of Norway; Mrs. J. Burdon Harriman, American Minister to Norway; and Mrs. Frederick A. Sterling, wife of the U. S. Minister to Sweden, and her three children.

Italian prisoners of war, rescued by the British when they sank three Italian submarines in the Mediterranean Sea, are here waiting to be taken ashore in a motor launch at an undisclosed port.

Probably no one outside the army has a better working knowledge of every phase of Britain's defences than the king, who is indefatigable in touring army and air force centres throughout the nation. Here he emerges from a dugout at an anti-aircraft post in Kent—one of the ground batteries which have brought down more than 50 German planes in the past two weeks.

Their Majesties the King and Queen are cheered by the workers as they make a tour of inspection of a factory in the English Midlands. Not for one instant since the start of hostilities have "Their Majesties thought of self. They have given of their every day a large portion of the welfare of the nation.

PRISONER

Bishop R. J. Renison got his first letter, Aug. 19, from his son, Pilot Officer R. J. B. Renison (ABOVE), of the R.A.F., since he was reported missing May 18. "We thought he was shot down over France," said Bishop Renison. The letter, a short single sheet, said: "I have now reached my final camp. Was in hospital some time. My wounds have healed. Our treatment is very good..."

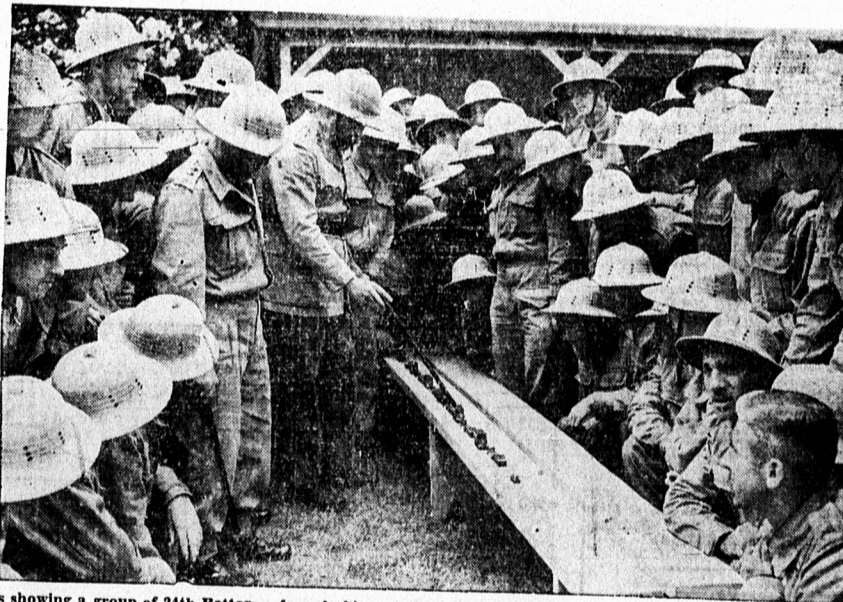

HEADS NEW BRIGADE

An armored brigade has been authorized for the C.A.S.F. Hon. J. L. Ralston, minister of national defence, announced in a press interview, Aug. 21. Lt. Col. F. F. Worthington has been promoted to colonel and will command the brigade, which will be assembled at Camp Borden.

It takes plenty of training to handle one of these guns (LEFT) with the split second timing required by modern war. A gunner must know every part, and that often runs into hundreds, and what each part does as well. These are members of the 15th Field Battery at Camp Niagara. Major John Oster is showing a group of 24th Battery, gunners the vehicles and equipment that go to make up various army units. These toy trucks and motorcycles (RIGHT) give the men a better idea of what the army works with than they'd get from looking at the real thing spread out over several square miles. In the last war a private was trained to obey orders and leaving thinking to his superiors. This war is different. At Camp Niagara 1940's soldier is shown why.

Formation of an advisory committee, representative of every province in Canada, has been announced by Resources Minister T. A. Crerar. This committee will advise on all questions relating to the placement of child evacuees arriving in Canada from overseas. Dr. E. C. Wallace, president of Queen's University, will act as chairman.

Here is the Northern Ontario prison camp from which Lieut. Werner Koche, German naval officer, escaped Monday by means of tunnel passing from the coolhouse underneath the barbed-wire fences. He was later caught crossing Victoria Bridge, Montreal. Sitting inside the compound are a number of Koche's fellow-prisoners, whom he is said to have "double-crossed" by using the tunnel when it had been planned for a general break. At RIGHT is an idea of the barriers Koche had to surmount. The mesh fence, topped by bar-wire is 10 feet high. Outside is a second entanglement and the corridor between is flooded at night and patrolled constantly by guards.
