FAMILY COMPLICATIONS.

Many ingenious complications in genealogy have been compiled, but the following one has the merit of being definite as to time, place and people. It concerns a family living at Faversham, in Kent, in February, 1760. Old Hawood had two daughters by his first wife, of whoms the elder was married to John Cashick, the son, and the younger to John Cashick, the father. Cashick senior had a daughter by his first wife. The daughted of old Haywood married and of had a son, which led to the complication summed up in the following distict, summed up be spoken by Cashick's second wife:

My father is my son, and I am my mother's mother.
My sister is my daughter, and I'm grandmother to my brother.

THE INDIAN GAME

Lacrosse is an Indian game, which the hite men adapted and organized into the modern pastime that we know today.

Canada's national game is unique among all national sports. It was found here, like all the other natural resources of the country. It belonged to the aborigines, and was taken over from them by the newcomers. Canadians developed the playing rules, and Canadians have always excelled all other lacrosse players in the world.

With the Indians lacrosse was a community game. It was frequently played with from 500 to 1,000 men to a side, and the contest took place on a field about a mile long. As late as 1860, the game was played with 25 men to a side, two of whom were goal keepers.

The first record of white men trying lacrosse is in the year 1840 Soon after it became the national game of Canada the twelve man team came into existence.

KIPLING NOW AND THEN

A London bookseller is trying to find a purchaser at $4000 for a manuscript satire of Anglo-Indian society which Kipling is said to have produced in cub-reported days in India. Kipling, we are told, thought so little of it that after giving it away he forgot about it, though a few years ago he offered to buy back the work that he could not recall.

An author does not consider himself befriended when somebody exhumes a literary indiscretion dead and buried. When he penned the manuscript such a price upon it within his lifetime would not have occurred to him as possible.

As a young man, on his way home from India, Kipling paused in Philadelphia and tried in vain to dispose of some of his fascinating tales for publication at $50 apiece. Even in 1905 the late Richard Watson Gilder expressed his consternation over Kipling's expectation of $1000 for a short story submitted to the Century Magazine. When the author's vogue became firmly established in England the editor of an undergraduate monthly at Cambridge, hearing that Kipling's price was a shilling a word, sent him that sum and asked for a word. The answer was "Thanks."

But that is not the answer to the book-seller who puts on the market a ghost that the writer fervently desires to have laid forevermore.

NATURAL CURIOSITY IN SCOTLAND

A singular natural curiosity located in the valley of the Annan in Scotland, is what is known as the Devil's Beef-tub. It is in the form of a hollow or basin, surrounded by high hills which make it so secluded a spot that a large number of persons can conceal themselves in it with ease and remain unseen by others in the immediate neighborhood.

In ancient times it was frequently used as a hiding place for stolen cattle, and it is this fact which has given it its name. It is mentioned in several of the novels of Sir Walter Scott.

PET CAT PUT UP A TERRIFIC FIGHT.

NEW YORK, Dec. 29. —A pet cat attacked three members of a Brooklyn family tonight, and for more than an hour withstood an efforts of the members of the household and three policemen to subdue it. It was only after the animal had been driven into a bedroom and the policemen had battered it with their clubs and fired eight shots that the cat was killed.

HORSES HOBBY OF PRINCESS MARY.

That love of a horse is ingrained in every Englishman is exemplified in the House of Windsor, formerly Guelph, for horseflesh in every guise may be said to be a keynote of enjoyment to nearly every member of the British Royal Family, says the Philadelphia Public Ledger.

From the times of the "Merry Monarch", who was mainly instrumental in introducing the sport of matching the qualities of the thoroughbred, down to the time of the late King Edward ubiquitously dubbed "the first sportsman of Europe," the horse had come in for more than a fair share of adulation and admiration, but it has been left to a princess of the present reign to develop the knowledge of horses quite unusual in ladies of royal birth. The princess is Princess Mary, Viscountess Lescelles.

As a little girl Princess Mary loved the stable far more than other parts of the stately palaces in which she was reared, for here were to be found the affectionate animals in which, as she grew older, she was to find her chief interests. At four or five years her management of a horse was frequently remarked upon, for although no animal of vicious tendencies was ever entrusted with the carrying of this important young lady, yet even at this tender age she had no use for an animal without some modicum of "ginger."

It was not until some five years later, however, that the Princess began to show that peculiar knowledge of individual horses which has since developed into an almost uncanny sort of second sight. She can now pick out one horse from a bunch at 600 yards distance tell you its name, its age and sundry other information known only to the grooms, for the Master of the Horse (the Earl of Granard who married an American, lady, Miss Beatrice Ogden Mills) is neither expected nor probably cares to know more about the stables than the number of the animals in the stalls and that they are in good heart and fettle.

This innate love of animals she shares equally with her brothers Al of them are no mean performers in the saddle, whether "at hands" or "over a country". In fact, the Prince of Wales, accomplished in winning an open steeplechase cup against the best amateur riders in the country, when having his very first mount at the Household Brigade meeting at Hawthorne Hill, a feat which the sporting crowd gathered upon the course cheered him to the echo.

This, too, in a measure probably had much to do with the sympathetic understanding which later brought about the Princess' engagement and marriage to Lord Lisceles, another man noted for his love of the horse.

THE AWFUL TRUTH

"You look fed up, old man."

"Yes, I've had a thrilling day. That little beast of an office boy of mine came to me with the old gag about getting off for his grandmother's funeral, so just to teach him a lesson I said I would accompany him."

"Ah, not so bad; was it a good game?"

"No, it was his grandmother's funeral."—The Passing Show.

Scientists Uphold Organic Evolution

CAMBRIDGE, Mass. Dec 29. — A result affirming that "no scientific generalization is more strongly supported by thoroughly tested evidences than is that of organic evolution," was adopted today by the council of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. The resolution expressed the conviction that any legislation attempting to limit the teaching of the doctrine of evolution would be "a profound mistake."

It cited an attempt in several states to prohibit the teaching of evolution in the public schools and the wide publicity given to assertions that the theory of evolution was a mere guess which leading scientists were abandoning.

The resolution affirms that the evidences in favor of the evolution of man are "sufficient to convince every scientist of note in the world" that the theory of evolution is one of the most potent of the great influences for good that have thus far entered into human experience," and that to limit its teachings "could not fail to injure and retard the advancement of knowledge and of human welfare, by denying the freedom of teaching and inquiry which is essential to all progress."

The meeting of the council marked the opening of the 76th annual meeting of the association here at the joint invitation of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and Harvard University.

Every branch of science is represented among the 3,000 delegates to the meeting.

The scientists were welcomed tonight by the mayors of Cambridge and Boston, Dean Talbot of the Institute of Technology and President Lowell of Harvard. Professor J. Playfair McMurrich of Toronto, president of the association, introduced his predecessor, Dr. E. H. Moore, of the University of Chicago, who made the principal address.
