

WAS VERY WEAK NERVOUS AND MELANCHOLY

Mrs. Geo. McKenzie, Campbellford, Ont., writes:—A short time ago I was troubled very badly with my heart and nerves, the cause of it, I think, was my going through the change of life.

"I was very weak and melancholy, and so nervous I could hardly bear to hear a clock ticking, and I did not sleep well.

"I was advised to try so I sent at once for a box; took them and got another, and before they were all gone I felt good, my nerves are fine, I do not mind any noise, and I can sleep well. I can not recommend them too highly to those suffering as I did."

"Jealous Hearts"

By MILDRED BARBOUR

CONCERNING THE ACTION AND CHARACTERS:—

The happiness of—MILlicent DEERING, a bride of two months, is shattered when she finds her cousin and foster-sister, ELINOR, and her husband, TONY, kissing in the garden the night before Elinor's departure from their southern home for New York. She asks herself why he married her, if he loved Elinor.

The situation is this:—DAN CARVER, deceased, who adopted Millicent and Elinor when they were children, had been in love with Tony's mother in his youth. Becoming eccentric as he aged, he was obsessed with a desire to have one of the girls married to Tony. In his will he had stipulated that the bulk of his estate is to go to the one who becomes Tony's wife. The other is to receive a small allowance for life. And it is Millicent who is in love with Tony. But Tony loves Elinor and is glad of an excuse to propose to her, having done so twice before. She rejects him and tells him he must marry Millicent.

CHAPTER 6

FIRST LOVE

Millicent was dressing for dinner, but Elinor still lingered on the tennis-court, dreaming dreams of the triumphs that she confidently believed were in store for her. Millicent's heart was heavy. When she had seen Elinor and Tony Deering disappear behind the hedge-of poplars that hid the tennis-court from view, she told herself that her own dream was over. Tony was going to ask Elinor to marry him. And Elinor would, of course, accept him. It never occurred to Millicent, in her infatuation, that any girl could refuse Tony Deering. He'd been her idol since childhood, just as Elinor had been his feminine counterpart, enshrined on a pedestal in Millicent's heart. As a child, she had never read a fairy-tale without seeing Tony as the Prince Charming and Elinor as the lovely Princess to be rescued from treacherous persistent dangers. When she grew older and reached the Idylls-of-the-King stage in literature, Tony was Lancelot and Sir Galahad and King Arthur all rolled into one. And Elinor was Elaine—not that the personality exactly fitted Elinor. Millicent never was particularly consistent, but she had to admit to herself that she couldn't quite picture Elinor pining away and dying for love of any one. Somehow the character of Guinevere seemed to be more in Elinor's line, but even in her innocence, Millicent sensed that there was something a bit wrong about Guinevere, and she couldn't compare her idol to such a person.

"You—you aren't going to marry Tony?"

While she dressed, she sighed, finding no comfort in the charming reflection that her mirror gave back to her. To be Continued.

The dull silk of her mourning- frock was startlingly becoming, for it emphasized her fragile fairness. The soft blond curls that outlined her small, shapely head glistened like pure gold—a rich gold that just missed the coppery tinge of Elinor's hair; her eyes were brown and velvety, like the petals of a pansy. They were rather wonderful eyes, although they did not have the quality that made Elinor's eyes so striking. Neither did they flash with an instantaneous change of mood. But they were steady and deep and very sweet. A youthful and adoring suitor once had told her, in a burst of what he believed to be originality, that a man could drown in such eyes. But, at that, he wasn't as trite as he sounded. Millicent's eyes were like that. They were very sad eyes that evening, as she dressed for dinner, and they refused to smile back at her. She told herself that she must hide her feelings. Elinor, no matter how she felt, could be gay and sparkling. No one ever could read Elinor. But then Elinor was not in love with Tony Deering. Ever since she had seen them together that afternoon, Millicent had been haunted by the fear that Tony cared for Elinor. Curious that it had never occurred to her before. They always had been, all three of them, such friends and comrades that Millicent had never suspected Tony's infatuation for Elinor. Perhaps she had been too engrossed in her own efforts to hide her love for him. Whenever he wasn't looking in her direction, she watched him; but when his glance turned toward her, her own gaze was instantly averted, or veiled. But it occurred to her, for the first time that afternoon, that Tony usually was looking at Elinor and hardly ever seemed to see her—at least, that had been the case lately. The thought stabbed her. Elinor strolled in while Millicent was clasping a dull jet necklace around her slim throat. It made her flesh look like white velvet. She smiled a greeting. Elinor came over to stand beside her foster-sister and study their reflections critically in the mirror. To be Continued.

Ups And Downs In Tryon And Vicinity

The Easter season has come and gone once again. Easter—the celebration of the Miracle of the Resurrection of our Lord and Saviour, Jesus Christ. Easter also tells of the beginning of a new life for every leaf and plant—no matter how small or unimportant. But let us hope that all our Gardian readers, each and every one have had a very joyful Easter-tide.

Misses Gertrude and Marion Howatt of Tryon were visitors to the adjoining community of Craupaud on Thursday of last week, also Messrs. George and Jimmy MacLeod of Tryon.

With the arrival of Spring, the wild geese have also made their appearance in great numbers. Other birds, Robins, Crows, Blackbirds and Juncas have also migrated here in large numbers. The frogs were heard piping their melancholy dirges in the swamps and marshes for the first time on last Saturday evening.

Mrs. William MacNeill of Searletown, P. E. I., has returned to her home atty enjoying a pleasant vacation, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. Albert Mabey, of Tryon.

Several teachers visited their respective homes at Tryon during the Easter holidays, among these were: Miss Amy Howatt, Principal of Darnley School, and Miss Ruth Mullins of Mount Tryon.

Mr. John MacNutt of Darnley, P. E. I., passed Easter the welcome guest of Mr. and Mrs. Bruce Howatt of West Tryon.

The farmers are again beginning the talk of Seed Potatoes in earnest, the majority of farmers are putting in an even greater acreage than last season—which is saying something!

Miss Beulah Robinson of Augustine Cove, spent Sunday with friends in Tryon.

Mr. K. C. Holmes of Victoria, made a business trip to Tryon on Tuesday of last week.

I regret to report that the Tryon ladies are still suffering from what their hubbies call "mat craze," but with the arrival of these nice balmy Spring days, "house-cleaning" is beginning to be uppermost in their minds. I heard one gentleman remark: "Pray tell me which is worse—mat-hooking or house-cleaning?"

Mrs. Maud Bell of North Tryon, left last week for the Royal Victoria Hospital, on Montreal, where she will undergo an operation. Her daughter, Miss Jean, accompanied her.

One of Tryon's progressive young men, Mr. Brenton Carr, left on Thursday morning of last week, for Boston, Mass., where a good position awaits him. Here's wishing him "Good luck" in the city of beans and brown bread.

The trout fishing season opened as usual on April 1st, and the rivers and streams yielded some fine specimens of "Speckled Beauties" to the Anglers, who were fortunate enough to catch them. Fishing is certainly a fine pastime for these nice April days.

Mr. Reg. Dixon, progressive farmer of North Tryon, has purchased a new Heintzman Piano, and says it's real nifty.

News has been received from Mrs. John Gamble, of Branch Roads, who recently underwent a serious operation in Hospital at Charlottetown, that the operation has been successful and that she is doing nicely. Miss Millie Gamble, R. N., accompanied her.

Friends and neighbors of Mrs. H. A. MacPhee who is now undergoing treatment in the Prince County Hospital, are glad to learn that there is a slight improvement in her condition.

INSIDIOUS EYE STRAIN

We use this adjective advisedly. Sufferers from Eyestrain may have perfect vision and therefore do not suspect the presence of any eye defect. The motive power of the entire human organism is Nerve Energy. Normal eyes, it is computed utilize about 20% of this Nerve Energy, but when Eyestrain is present, a much larger proportion is required. Hence defective eyes, through their consumption of an excessive amount of Nerve Energy may seriously affect the functioning of other organs of the body and produce ill health.
