PRINCE EDWARD ISLAND: You may talk of your modern cit-ies With their night clubs and lights so bright, But send me back to Spud Island To spend just one peaceful night.

Just to walk once more through the garden, On the freshness and quiet is bliss; Away from the noise of the city, Oh what a sweet change from this. Some people may like to travel, Over this beautiful land and sea, But no place looks half so peace-ful, As Prince Edward Island to me. —H. B. Cameron, Kensington.

Web-ster of Charlottetown, the double ring ceremony being performed. The bride was dressed in a floor-length gown of white Duchess sat-in and lace. She carried an arm bouquet, the only ornament being a gold locket. Gift of the groom, Miss Gerie MacLeod, sister of the bride, was dressed in rose sheer and carried a bouquet. The groom was attended by Mr. Stewart Sher-ren, brother in law of the bride. Immediately following the cere-mony supper was served to im-mense date relatives and guests. Travelling the bride wore a blue dress and coat, white hat and white accessories. On July 2nd they were returned to a most sumptu-ous shower in Springfield.

The Conquerors and the Conquered in Sicily

Long lines of men march in Sicily these days—the victors headed north and east into the final battles, the vanquished headed southward away from war. Re-miniscent of the djebels of Tunisia is the hilly scenery, above, where an American infantry column of trucks and troops moves along a road toward Palermo. Faces of the Ital-ians who got caught do not display dismay at their captive state, right. Expressions indicate they are glad the war is over for them and look with anticipation to internment in some Allied country. On the first leg of the journey away from Sicily line of outward bound Italian pris-oners marches along a beach, bot-tom left, to board landing craft that will take them to North Africa. These same boats brought invading armies to the island. Once in North Africa, the Italians are led by a Bren gun carrier, bottom right, to a temporary prison camp. From there they may be sent to America or elsewhere while Allied armies continue their northward march into Europe.
