Blue Murder

BY EDMUND SHELL

She eyed him suspiciously, fearfully.
"Who are you, Monsieur?" she demanded hoarsely, "and what is your business with Monsieur Daudot?"
Dighton pursed up his lips.
"I wish to see him on a private matter—one, however, which is of utmost importance."
"M. Daudot does not live here."
"Quite so; but I understood that he might be found at this address." He glanced down at his gloved hands.
"Has he returned from his visit to England?"
Her hands shot to her hair and she shrank, moaning, against the far wall.
"Ah! Mon Dieu! Now I understand! I warned him to have nothing to do with it—and see now what has happened! You are of the police, monsieur?"
She had suddenly become very calm.
"Well, not exactly—"
She threw open the door to its fullest extent and directed him to a small room, furnished more with regard to elegance than comfort.
"Sit down, M'sieur," she said brokenly. "I told him how it would be, but he would not listen. I will sell them in England," he declared; "in France it is too dangerous." He told her he had been there often before—and knew what to do. That was on Tuesday. He had one other appointment—politics or something of that kind—and he was to have returned the same night to France. And now you have got him? I am sorry very sorry."
Dighton, starting through the French windows to the little balcony beyond, was engaged in a desperate struggle to retain his composure. This little dark-eyed woman, with her painted lips and fashionable clothes, had been nursing some secret ever since M. Daudot's departure. It had preyed on her nerves. Deceived by Dighton's height and build and his mention of that journey, she had resorted to confession, probably to clear herself of any suspicion of complicity.
In what? What was too dangerous for an ex-detective to sell in his own country? What was this other ex-Daudot had had to grind in Lorraine?
He racked his brain.
Daylight began to filter in: The two addresses * * * the concierge's story of Mlle. Laroche's extravagance * * * Daudot had been at his wit's end to keep up these two establishments. It was an old story, typical of the life of the French metropolis. Versed in crime from the one side, he had crossed to the other to meet his liabilities. He had stolen something of value—jewels probably.
He unwrapped the hat and held it so that she could see the initials inside.
"You recognize this?"
"Parfaitement, Monsieur."
She sat on the edge of a great carved chair with upholstery of silk brocade—a sad, wan-looking figure, that the natural coloring that formed a background to the artificial had faded.
"Can you tell me any reason why he should have stolen these—er—things?"
The corners of her mouth drooped into a smile full of irony.
"He stole the pearls, M'sieur, to cover his losses at gambling. That is the whole truth. He will tell you that I was the cause of his ruin. He has always pretended that I was extravagant. That is false, M'sieur, absolutely false."
Dighton checked her with a movement of his finger.
"Mademoiselle Laroche," he said quietly. "I am here to discover all I can in favor of your friend. Monsieur Daudot has had a distinguished record, and we are disposed to believe that he was not alone in this crime—that it was prompted by some one else."
There came a sound from the passage outside, the noise of a key shuddering open.
The girl was on her feet now, trembling violently.
"It is her, M'sieur! the man of whom you spoke! If he finds you here he will kill you."
Crossing the room swiftly, she threw open a door and pointed into the darkened apartment beyond.
"Go in there, M'sieur," she whispered. "Hide behind the curtain. Behind the bed—anywhere * * * Unless it was the Lizard he was not interested. He wanted to be sure of his quarry first."
Mechanically he eased the automatic in his hip pocket and slipped to the hinge-side of the door.
There ensued a long silence and then a man's voice, speaking in French, that he could not determine whether he had heard before or not. He caught quick, jerky sentences, accusations apparently, for audible.
And then, for the second time in his existence, he heard the faint, hissing report of Ahlberg's Pocket Death!

(To Be Continued.)

Carried on the back of a new hair brush that is small enough to be carried in a pocket is a hand mirror that can be removed for use at the same time.

"KING OF PAIN" ANTIMONIAL

At the Christening of the Duchess of York

A charming photograph of H. R. H. the Duchess of York taken upon her arrival at the Clyde with the Duke of York to christen the newest of the Canadian Pacific Duchess liners. The Duke, speaking after the ceremony, said that the occasion was the first time a member of the Royal Family had sponsored a merchant vessel. The progress of Their Royal Highnesses through the yards was headlined in Britain as a "tour of cheers". The Duchess insisted on seeing everything connected with the vessel herself, crawling under the keel and making a very thorough inspection. At luncheon after the launching, Sir George McLachlan Brown, European general manager of the Canadian Pacific, presented her with a souvenir copy of a booklet showing pictures of the launches of the four Duchess steamships, including on the front page a photograph of the launch by Her Royal Highness of the vessel which carries her name.

"I warn every woman I employ"

Says the woman Personnel Manager in a large office

Realization of this unconscious offense distresses many women. Now such offense is unnecessary. This remarkable sanitary pad deodorizes completely.

IN the world of business, in society, women often find themselves embarrassed at certain times. Sometimes they offend without knowing why. When they learn, miserable self-consciousness follows. Make-shift efforts to counteract the difficulty seldom succeed. Now a discovery made in Kotex Laboratories ends all these fears and worries. Science has discovered a way to counteract a serious offense.

Kotex now completely deodorizes Kotex has brought a new idea of feminine hygiene to women all over the world. In the past ten years they have learned new comfort, new ease-of-mind through this sanitary protection. Now, after years of work, a process has been perfected that completely ends all odors. The one remaining hygienic problem in connection with sanitary pads is solved.

Shaped to fit, too Because corners of the pad are rounded and tapered it may be worn without evidence under the most clinging gown. There is none of that conspicuous bulkiness so often associated with old-fashioned methods. And you can adjust the filler, make it thinner, thicker, narrower—to suit your own special needs. It is easily disposed of, no laundering is necessary. A new process makes it softer than ever before.

Buy a box today—60c for twelve. On sale at all drug, dry goods and departmental stores.

Mother wants Bon Ami Powder, too

WOMEN everywhere are finding how handy it is to keep Bon Ami Powder and Bon Ami Cake always on hand.

For nearly forty years the compact Bon Ami Cake has been unrivalled as a window and mirror cleaner. Used by millions of women daily, it is still unequalled.

And what a multitude of uses you'll find for Bon Ami Powder! It's so handy for cleaning aluminium, copper, agate and enamel; bathtubs, basins, and tiling; nickel and brass fixtures, Congoleum and linoleum, etc.

Unlike coarse or abrasive cleaners, Bon Ami Powder and Bon Ami Cake blot up dirt instead of scouring it off. And they will not redden or roughen your hands.

Powder and Cake

In use 37 years—
