The groom's mother introduced the bride to her new friends, then Misses Kathleen Boulier and Mildred Lefurgy carried in the very fancy decorated basket of presents which was opened by Miss Mildred Lefurgy and the accompanying verses read by Miss Lois MacKay. The gifts were placed by Misses Elma Large and Evelyn Harvey. After this was completed, the groom gave a very fitting reply, then the crowd all joined in singing "For they are jolly good fellows". Three cheers for the bride and groom went up like a bang, and the groom received a hearty bouncing. Several interesting games were played by all, the intervals being filled with piano music by Misses Elma Large and Lois MacKay. Lunch was served by the ladies, which every one heartily enjoyed. After wishing Mr. and Mrs. Large many happy years of wedded bliss, all wended their way homeward, having had a very enjoyable evening, in spite of the snowstorm.

Art Society Meets

The P. E. I. Art Society met in the Harris Gallery on Thursday evening.

A short discussion took place on the occasion put forward by Mr. Arthur Lismer, C. A., on his recent visit to Charlottetown and the Society decided to look more fully into the subject to discover how it might best follow up these ideas and promote the furthering of a realization of them.

A small collection of Mr. Currier and Ives prints was on display and Mr. Charters, who has been a collector for several years, gave an informal talk on the subject. Mr. Currier and Mr. Ives and on their work telling why some prints are valuable today and some are not.

Many questions were asked and answered and interesting discoveries made by those present.

to obey Marx's clearly enjoined injunction. No, they have, as a matter of course, abandoned the ground of the class-struggle, though still the class-struggle, although warned by Marx that "the father of reaction is Utopianism" they chose the fresh and fraudulent schemes of the contemporary reformers of Marx's day and later those of Kausky, et al; so that they have never made any worthwhile effort to act on the principles of Marxian Socialism, contenting themselves with reforms to prolong the life of the system, they (some for personal gain) affect to despise.

Moreover, as Lenin said: "No proletarian, reconciling itself to the least violation by 'its' nation of the rights of other nations can be Socialists." The German Social Democrats, other Social Democrats, and Stalin and Co., stand condemned by Lenin of the Third International.

Furthermore, while a "critical analysis of capital, which is principally a polemic against capitalists and the capitalist mode of production," might be considered as the "political theory" which led to the creation of a working-class Socialist party on the continent (of Europe) generally, whatever their profession, I think I have shown that the Social-Democrats have not acted on Marxian precepts, therefore if they have accepted Marxian doctrine, it has been with reservations, reservations which place them among those of whom Marx wrote to Engels in 1865; when he wrote: "The logic of things will speak. But the honor of the workers party demands that it reject fancy pictures of this kind even before their hollowness is exposed by experience. The working class is revolutionary or it is nothing."

As Heretofore the world that has been done wrong has been done wrong for the very best of reasons.

So, though I may be wrong, I hope I have shown a good and sufficient reason. I am, Sir, etc. E. O. PRICE.
