THE GUARDIAN SHORT STORY

After Seven Years
By Belle Maniates
Copyright, 1904, by Belle Maniates

In the palm room of the Waldorf at a table partially obscured by a pot of palms sat John Browning. He was a man well past his first youth, of form erect and face bronzed by the sun that burned upon tropical battlefields. From his rather remote corner he scanned with interest every one who entered.

"After seven years," he thought, "I shouldn't expect to meet any acquaintances, but—ah, what luck!"

A party of four were seated themselves at a table near—a man and woman of middle age, a beautiful young woman with eyes that matched the violets she carried, and a lemon faced youth, receding of chin and swish of eye.

Browning was about to start forward when a voice at the nearest table spoke in subdued, but carrying tones: "Lyle Vaughn's fiancé! The engagement is conceded, though not announced."

John Browning resumed his seat. "It would have been far better," he thought, "if I had not called a halt on her affection for the trapper. Anything but this specimen! He is a link below the missing one!"

One of the voices at the next table again had a hearing:

"I admit he is not a howling success as to looks, but he has millions and antecedents."

John Browning scowled and continued his cogitations.

"Seven years since Lyle had his first little ripple of romance which I ended, I'll again be a disturber of dreams—or nightmares. I have a spur to her memory in my pocket now. Odd it should have reached me today."

He drew from his pocket a newspaper clipping which he gave to a waiter with instructions as to delivery.

The violet eyed woman looked up in amazement at the waiter and then her gaze again fell on the paper. It was a four line local giving the number of licenses issued to date to deer hunters in northern Michigan.

When she had read it she looked around. Then she rose, and he hurried to her with outstretched hand.

"Lyle! Little Lyle Vaughn!" he said in a soft, caressing voice that his command would have failed to recognize.

"John Browning! Now do I believe in the resurrection!"

Her father and mother claimed his attention, and after his presentation to Herbert Stuyvesant he seated himself beside Lyle.

The waiter again approached and handed Stuyvesant a telegram.

"My mother has another of her attacks," explained Stuyvesant to Mrs. Vaughn, and with a lingering glance at Lyle's impassive features, he took a reluctant departure.

Mrs. Vaughn at once gave Browning an elaborate and profuse description of Stuyvesant's fortune and prospects.

"The lady doth protest too much," thought John Browning, noting with amusement and satisfaction the infinite boredom in Lyle's face, an expression dimly reflected in her father's quiet, even features.

"You must go home with us, John," insisted Mr. Vaughn as they were leaving. "I don't care how late it is. I want to hear about those seven years and the wars."

"So do I," chimed in Lyle.

When they reached the house Mrs. Vaughn pleaded a headache. The others sat by the open fire in the library. Soon the soft, blue veil of good cigars invoked a wondrous tale of adventure from John Browning. Back in the shadows Lyle listened and followed over battlefields and African farms.

"I feel like Desdemona tonight," laughed Lyle, following him into the hall. "You've been very good to papa tonight, but I want a visit with you. Come down tomorrow morning at 11. Mamma will be shopping then."

"And Mr. Herbert Stuyvesant won't be here?" he asked.

"No. Why should he?"

She was a little discomfited by his steady gaze.

"I overheard some people in the palm room say he was your fiancé."

"He isn't," she denied; "not yet! I believe he'd like to be, and mamma lies awake nights fearing he won't be."

"And you?"

"And I was fast falling in papa's state—until—tonight when—"

"When—"

"I read that clipping."

She was not looking at him as she spoke and so did not see the dark flush that came to his bronzed face.

"Tomorrow at 11," he said tersely.

"Who sent you the clipping?"

"Plympton. He still hunts in Michigan every November."

"How it carried me back!" she sighed. "Those lovely days in the open!"

It was very late when John Browning reached his hotel, but he did not go to bed until he had lighted a cigar and lived over again the deer hunting season of seven years ago which a party of eastern people, including Vaughn, Lyle and himself, had spent in northern Michigan.

Those were halcyon days when he and Lyle had tramped over fields light-brushed with snow, through thickets and in the brown forest in pursuit of deer. At night they would return tired, happy and hungry to the big cabin, ready to start out again in the morning. Lyle had ever been a gay little comrade with him, but up there in the great northland of ice and snow he began to hope that he might not be too old, after all, to ask her to be still more than her "father's friend."

At the end of two weeks, however, he acknowledged to himself his mistake. The party had secured a new guide, a handsome young Canadian Frenchman with soft voice and lustreous eyes. He knew every inch of ground and every trick of deer hunting.

Lyle, romantic, willful and headstrong, took snapshots of him in every conceivable pose. She demanded his services on all occasions and chatted with him in French, a language not understood by John Browning, who was deeply concerned at the young girl's fancy.

He reasoned with her father one night that the weather was getting altogether too severe for Lyle up there and it would be prudent for her to return with the Crosbys the next day. Vaughn acquiesced. He usually did acquiesce in any suggestion from Browning.

When her father announced to Lyle the next morning that she was to go home that day, to Browning's surprise, she did not raise any objections. He thought, though, that she seemed very serious when he bade her adieu.

The life and light went out of the party for him after her departure, and he was glad when the season ended. En route for lower Michigan, he received a dispatch calling him farther west on business, which detained him until April. He arrived in New York to learn that Lyle was in college. In the latter part of the month war with Spain was declared, and as an officer in the national guard he was mustered into the United States service and went to Cuba. Peace declared, he again returned to New York. This time Lyle and her parents were abroad. He followed, just missing them at every place in their erratic tour.

Then had come the war in Africa, and the "siren song of the bullet" lured him to the cause of the Boers. Now he was again in New York and was to see in the morning his little friend of the long ago who had grown into a charming woman.

She teased him when he came into the library the next morning: "Still jealous of Plympton, John? You were such a stupid! Those cabin partitions were regular sounding boards. I heard your counsel to papa about my return. Of course the 'severe weather' was not the reason you ordered 'removal from station.' You really thought I was in love with that handsome half breed!"

"And weren't you?"

"John!"

"But you talked of him, to him and with him incessantly. You must have had 127 photographs of him."

"That was partly because it plagued you."

"Partly! What was the other reason?"

"Maybe I'll tell you some time."

"When?"

"After another lapse of seven years."

"Still," he persisted, "you looked and when you left for home."

"That was for the same reason."

"As what?"

"As the one I am to give you seven years hence."

"I am not going to wait seven years to tell you what I have known since you were a little schoolgirl, and you, with your powers of divining, Lyle, you surely must know that too!"

"No," she half whispered, "I don't know."

"You don't know, Lyle, that I have always loved you, and should never have had the hope and courage to tell you," he said presently. "If I had not seen you with the inane Herbert last night."

She laughed a soft, happy little laugh.

"I believe I won't wait seven years to tell you."

"No; tell me now."

"I have loved you ever since you gave me my first doll."

Mrs. Rosa Adams, niece of the late General Roger Hanson, C. S. A., wants every woman to know of the wonders accomplished by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I cannot tell you with pen and ink what good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound did for me, suffering from the illa peculiar to the sex, extreme lassitude and that all gone feeling. I would rise from my bed in the morning feeling more tired than when I went to bed, but before I had used two bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, I began to feel the buoyancy of my younger days returning, became regular, could do more work and not feel tired than I had ever been able to do before, so I continued to use it until I was restored to perfect health. It is indeed a boon to sick women and I heartily recommend it. Yours very truly, Mrs. ROSA ADAMS, 819 12th St., Louisville, Ky."

Any women who are troubled with irregular or painful menstruation, weakness, leucorrhoea, displacement or ulceration of the womb, that bearing-down feeling, inflammation of the ovaries, back-ache, general debility, and nervous prostration, should know there is one tried and true remedy, Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. No other medicine for women has received such wide-spread and unqualified indorsement. No other medicine has such a record of female cures.

"DEAR MRS. PINKHAM:—I am very pleased to recommend Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for womb and ovarian difficulties from which I have been a sufferer for years. It was the only medicine which was at all beneficial, and within a week after I started to use it, there was a great change in my feelings and looks. I used it for a little over three months, and at the end of that time I suffered no pain at the menstrual period, nor was I troubled with those distressing pains which compelled me to go to bed, and I have not had a headache since. This is nearly a year ago. I always keep a bottle on hand, and take a few doses every week, for I find that it tones up the system and keeps me feeling strong, and I never have that tired out feeling any more."

"I certainly think that every woman ought to try this grand medicine, for it would prove its worth. Yours very truly, Miss ELISE DANFORTH, 203 De Soto St., Memphis, Tenn."
