

Eyelashes, eyebrows hands and nails

AMONG the many users of "Vaseline" Petroleum Jelly, are beauty experts who find it of great value in grooming the eyebrows and lashes and in keeping the hands soft and smooth and the finger nails in perfect condition. This pure natural substance is healing and absolutely safe to use both externally and internally.

How to use it

Shape the eyebrows every day with a tiny brush and a bit of "Vaseline" Jelly. You can soon train them to a becoming, well-shaped arch. Touch the lashes and eyelids each night with it and leave on over-night. This will encourage silky lashes.

To keep dry hands soft and smooth, massage them well with "Vaseline" Jelly and leave it on over-night. Wear soft gloves. Apply it to the nails, to soften the cuticle and prevent hang-nails.

Practical Patriotism

(The Ottawa Citizen)

For many who cheered in 1914, the Great War has receded into the twilight of forgotten things. Crowds assemble at the cenotaph on Armistice Day. The memory of Canada's fifty thousand dead on the field of battle is honored. But it cannot be expected to mean much to the younger generation.

Boys are reaching adult manhood in Canada who never knew one soldier of the nation's 500,000 enlisted men. Recollections of the war have no place in the conversation of the young people; they are bored by the talk of older folk about the Great War. It is just about as much a thing of the past as the American Civil War had become before 1914.

Good work is still being done, however, as it may long have to be, for the incapacitated, the maimed survivors of the maddest effort ever made by the nations to injure one another. Canada is paying pensions to 50,000 ex-service men. Including dependents, over 181,000 individuals are receiving financial aid from this Dominion for service rendered in the war.

One commendable form of aid outside of pensions is carried on in the Vetcraft Shops. The Department of Soldiers' Civil Re-establishment opened up special workshops to provide employment for men who had been too badly injured to compete for work with fit men in private commercial industry. Such workshops are maintained in Halifax, Montreal, Toronto, Hamilton and Winnipeg, and in Vancouver and Victoria by agreement with the Red Cross Society.

According to figures furnished by Major J. L. Melville, supervisor of Vetcraft Workshops, about 300 men are thus usefully employed. They manufacture wooden toys, juvenile furniture, plain woodenware, porcelain top tables and similar articles. One substantial form of employment is the manufacture of poppies and wreaths for Armistice Day. Of that most appropriate emblem, so directly coupled with the scenes of Canadian sacrifice, about 1,500,000 poppies and 7,000 wreaths are manufactured annually in the Vetcraft Shops.

During one period of the year, when orders are pouring in for poppies, the Vetcraft Shops are kept working at high pressure. It has been suggested, most sensibly, that the work on the manufacture of poppies could be more evenly distributed throughout the year by an organized effort of salesmanship to induce some of the largest patrons of Poppy Day to place orders earlier in the year. It would mean that the Vetcraft workers would be steadily employed for a longer period, instead of being rushed with extra work for about three months.

Perhaps the Canadian Legion of the British Empire Service League would find it possible to develop this plan. The Canadian Legion is largely entitled to this credit for the success of Poppy Day. The nation-wide organization of ex-service men has done much to help disabled comrades along the road to re-establishment in the years since demobilization.

Premier Pleased That Dispute Is Ended

LONDON, Aug. 17.—Premier Ramsay MacDonald tonight sent a message to the press from his vacation retreat at Lossiemouth, Scotland, expressing gratification that the cotton dispute in Lancashire was ended yesterday, and his hopes that the award of the arbitrators would be given without undue delay. His message emphasizes the fact that "the position of the cotton industry is not at all satisfactory. Lancashire must put its house in order. Taking the industry as a whole it requires a far more active, co-operative organization, so that the skill of the operators, the natural advantages of the country of Lancashire, and its inherited opportunities in reputation and market, may be used to the utmost under modern conditions."

"Certain sections of this industry must not be worked more in restraint than in promotion of trade as apparently has been the case. The inquiry which the government instituted must now be pushed ahead as quickly as possible, so that the temporary accommodation which will follow arbitration be used as an opportunity for both sides and all sections to get together, face the facts, and overcome them."

The premier then declared that his intimate knowledge of the operatives' representatives, and the "improved spirit" which he found when he met some of the employees at Edinburgh the other day, have given him good hope that the Lancashire cotton industry can be made to flourish. He hoped that the arbitration award would be accepted and loyally worked by both sides.

"Peace and co-operation are essential," he went on, "and when I say that I mean that the workers must feel that their interests are not being sacrificed. After all we work to live not any kind of life, but a decent one."
