VON MACKENSEN EN ROUTE TO BERLIN.

VIENNA, Dec. 5.—Field Marshal von Mackensen, who was in command of the German troops in Roumania when hostilities ended, and who is best known for his successes against the Russians on the east front, passing through Vienna yesterday on his way to Berlin.

The field marshal was accompanied by a staff of 20 officers. He did not leave the station, where he was given a great ovation by the assembled troops, but received a deputation of various German societies. Foreign Minister Deutsch made an address in behalf of the Austrian government. Women heaped the field marshal's car with flowers.

The Supreme Council at Paris decided recently to permit Field Marshal von Mackensen to return to Germany, taking into consideration the fact that he is 70 years of age. Shortly after the war ended von Mackensen tried to force his way to Germany by way of Hungary, but was apprehended at Budapest by French troops, and was later reported to have been interned at Salonica.

AIR FLIGHT FROM ROME IN TOKIO.

PEKING, Dec. 4.—Arrangements are being made in China for the proposed flight from Rome to Tokio by Italian aviators (Gabriele D'Annunzio, the poet-aviator, was originally selected for the flight, but because of his military activities the Italian government entrusted the leadership of the expedition to Colonel Rapallo, one of Italy's most daring aviators.) Much persuasion was necessary to induce the Chinese government to afford flying practice facilities in Peking.

SANDRA THE JEALOUS

By Jane Phelps

DISTRESSFUL SCENE

Is it not wonderful that, having carried the jealousies, the intolerance of childhood into my home, into my relations with my husband, I had not been for Everett's extreme courtesy, which invariably made me ashamed to voice all of my suspicions, we would surely have landed on the rocks of domestic infelicity.

My love for Everett had been a constantly growing love. My pride in him was enormous, and had increased as time went on. I had learned something of the quiet, depth of his mind; I recognized his dignity as being appropriate to a man in his position—instead of thinking of it as belonging to an old man (a word I now never used in connection with him—not even in my thoughts.)

Yet in all the years of my marriage, I had never known any unalloyed happiness for many days together; my jealousy effectually prevented this. However, in our married life there was none of the marital recrimination usually caused when either, or both, let the green-eyed monster sway their passions. This was due entirely to Everett's command of himself and a certain pride he had taught me to feel about giving way to my feelings before him. Indeed, I could more easily have done so before the nearest acquaintance. The few times I had given vent to my jealousies, were long past. Later, I had pretended, as I had when jealous of Miss Pierce, that nothing allied me; that I did not feel well, had a headache, or some other equally evasive reason.

I still occasionally felt nervous because of Miss Pierce—"Katie" as I now always call her. I knew Everett both liked and trusted her. He had shown his admiration for her openly many times. But whenever I thought of letting her go, her care of Junior, her devotion to him, made me hesitate. Then too I should have been obliged to combat Everett. He would not allow me to dismiss her without some good reason—something he would consider such.

I wonder why it is that if one is looking for trouble he always finds it? I was insistently watchful of Miss Pierce, of Everett, when she was around. My espionage brought results.

One day I had been out driving with Alice, Siome, was a bit late in getting home, and Everett was in before me. His hat and coat lay on the hall rack.

I had let myself in with my key, so no one knew I was home. Voices in the library arrested my attention. I walked quietly in that direction, with no attention of spying. But the door was not tightly closed, and I heard Everett say, "Katie" as I now always call her. I knew Everett both liked and trusted her. He had shown his admiration for her openly many times. But whenever I thought of letting her go, her care of Junior, her devotion to him, made me hesitate. Then too I should have been obliged to combat Everett. He would not allow me to dismiss her without some good reason—something he would consider such.

The Inter-Church Forward Movement

er of religion—not religion from the lips out, but religion deep-rooted in the hearts of men and born of the love of God. In the Church is to be found the only solution for the safety of the world and the safeguard of its peace. The Church must be made the great channel by means of which Christian men and women of the world—shall bring those who are with- out the pale into fellowship and communion with the living God.

The war has revealed the capacity of the people of this country, as of others, for sacrifice and devotion. Before 1914, the comparatively insignificant contributions that were asked for in the promotion of social and religious welfare were regarded as vast sums, and the programs of missionary workers, both at home and abroad, were regarded as purely visionary in the demands they made upon the material resources of the nation. But the war came and millions of money were willingly given to patriotic purposes of one kind and another—given over and over again—and thousands of the best men and women of the nation gladly and freely offered their lives on the altar of the country's cause, countless numbers of them having shed their blood that the Empire might live. The nobility of character of the nation has been admirably and overwhelmingly demonstrated, now the cause of the Church—the cause of God, makes its appeal for a continuance of the sacrifice that has already been so splendidly made—a continuance of the sacrifice not to the same proportion, but in some measure commensurate with the standards that prevailed during the war. "In other words," asked the speaker, "shall our responsibility to the Empire and our earthly sovereign—warily though it was—have been so much larger than our responsibility to the Kingdom of God?"

Great crowd opportunities, continued the speaker present themselves in China, Japan and India, and we shall be recreant in our duty if—as Christians we let those opportunities pass unheeded, without some adequate effort to avail ourselves of them.

THE OBJECTIVES OF THE FORWARD MOVEMENT.

The main objectives of the Forward Movement are:

- (1) Primarily, a mighty spiritual awakening among the leaders of the Churches, with a decided emphasis on the importance of this spirituality.
 - (2) A new devotion that shall express itself along three principal lines, namely: First of all, along the line of definite prayer activity throughout the Church there should be an imperative call for a life of prayer such as was never known before; secondly, a rebuilding of the family altar. No forward movement would be complete without a consideration of this important feature; and, thirdly, personal revival. The men and women who know God must go forth and bring other men and women into touch with the Lord.
 - (3) A new policy of Missionary expansion at home and abroad. There must be a policy of missionary activity that should in some measure be adequate to the great task that lies before the Church. In the speaker's own mission field in India, he was expected to minister to the needs of two hundred and fifty thousand people. The Church must face this tremendous situation and deal adequately with it.
 - (4) Finance. This Forward Movement is not for the time being Christians must realize that all their money have and are belong to God. There must be a recognition of God's ownership and man's stewardship. Ill-disposed critics sometimes assert that the Forward Movement is nothing but a money drive. This is absolutely untrue. The fundamental idea behind the movement is not one of material advancement but of spiritual improvement. It is true that a peace offering is being asked for, but that peace offering should be the expression of the people's recognition of the great fact of God's ownership and their stewardship, and their gratitude to Him for the mercies He has given them.
 - (5) The enlistment of young lives in Christian service. The ranks of the Ministry must be augmented, and young people must be made to feel that in the service of God there lies one of the most important duties of mankind.
- These five great objectives, said Mr. Priest, are the elements of the Forward Movement on which the different congregations of the Protestant Church united. In the preliminary discussions of the possibilities of this movement, it soon became apparent that the grave crisis which now confronts the Church must be faced from a national and united standpoint, and it was fully realized that the situation could not be met by the various churches acting independently as separate units. The inter-church movement is not a new organization, but the getting together and combining of the efforts and inspiration of all communities. The Forward Movement is not calling the Church to perform a new task, but to do that which has lain at her door throughout the centuries. When the financial appeal is made the work of the Forward Movement will not by any means have been completed. It will just then have really begun, and it will be for the Christian men and women of the Protestant Churches in Canada to do their utmost to make the cause of Christ prevail upon earth.
- Mr. Priest's address was received with enthusiasm and he was warmly applauded.
- The Chairman pointed out that the time had passed when the Church should be precluded from considering matters of finance touching its welfare. Millions of money had been given during the war for Red Cross and other patriotic purposes, and he had no hesitation in saying that one of the greatest forces in winning the war— notwithstanding anything that might be said to the contrary by cynical critics—was the Church. It was through the Church that the great spirit of generosity and self-sacrifice was derived by the people who had given so freely to the cause of the great war, and the Chairman bespoke on behalf of the Forward Movement a degree of this spirit of giving.

REPORTS OF DENOMINATIONAL ORGANIZERS.

The Chairman then called upon the Denominational Organizers or their representatives, who reported.

For the Methodist Church Mr. Strot had given a statement as to what had been done throughout the Maritime Provinces. His report showed a highly satisfactory state of affairs, among other things, the distribution of literature to the extent of 175 pages of pamphlets.

Rev. Mr. Machum reported on behalf of the Baptist Church, his report also being very satisfactory. One interesting feature was the statement that the coloured congregation of the Baptist Church in Halifax had, notwithstanding pressing calls on their purses for their own works of immediate importance, contributed a thousand dollars.

Rev. Mr. Raymond reported on behalf of the Anglican Church. In the absence of the Organizer, he said that the Anglican Church was prepared to do its utmost in the interests of the Movement and he assured his congregation that they would leave nothing undone which would tend to make the movement a reality forward.

Rev. Dr. Fullerton, on behalf of Rev. Mr. Ross of Halifax, reported for the Presbyterian Church, his report being exceedingly satisfactory.

Dr. Fullerton said that if the Forward Movement had done nothing else than to unite the family altar, as it had done in many congregations, it would have amply justified itself.

The meeting then dispersed in order that the denominational rallies might be held in the respective churches.

THE EVENING SESSION

The evening session was highly successful, the Methodist church being crowded. His Honour Judge Stewart presided, and the speakers were Rev. Dr. Pidgeon, Archbishop Worrell, Rev. Dr. Graham and Bishop Lucas. The addresses were all intensely interesting and a great impetus was given to the Forward Movement. The Resolutions Committee reported thanking the various organizations and individuals who had helped to make the Convention a success. Greetings were received from the Convention in Vancouver, and altogether the meeting was a decided success.
