When Jeems translated this Toinette bowed her head and cried softly. Tiaoga saw her. Crumpled on the ground with Jeems' arm around her, she looked like Silver Heels, with her long braid falling over her shoulder. No one was conscious of the strain at his heart as he came toward her. Warriors, wide-eyed, saw that he did not limp, and in his attitude was a tigerish defiance of what they might think. He paused before the girl and dropped his beaver-skin blanket at her feet. Toinette looked up through tears and smiled again as a strange softness stole over the savage face. He gazed at her steadily, as if he were seeing a spirit, and said:

"The soul of Sol Yan Makwum has come to abide in you!"

Sol Yan Makwum was Silver Heels.

Tiaoga turned away, and his warriors knew that his decision had been made. There would be no haste after this in the direction of Hidden Town.

On a couch made of the beaver-skin and armful of balsam boughs which Jeems had carried from the creek bottom, Toinette rested while the Indians prepared for the evening feast. She smoothed and braided her hair as she watched them, and although every bone in her body seemed to have an ache of its own, she felt a sensation of complete relaxation stealing over her for the first time since the tragedy at Tonteur manor. The mental ease which came to soften her environment embraced her in such a stealthy way that she was unconscious of the moment when her eyes closed in complete surrender to the exhaustion which was claiming her.

Jeems returned from one of the fires bearing a stick on which a dozen of the cooked pigeons were spitted. He did not awaken Toinette but after he had finished his meal, he broiled another dozen of the pigeons until they were as brown as chestnuts and stored them away with a roasted lily root and a few artichokes.

For two hours the cooking continued and when it was finished, with the night's kill ready for future use, Tiaoga's warriors wrapped themselves in their blankets and lay down to sleep. The camp was soon in silence, and for a long time Jeems sat meditating upon the changes which had come into his life within the space of two days and nights. That everything was gone and that he and Toinette were the only ones left of those who had so recently made up their world seemed a monstrous exaggeration of fact. Toinette, sleeping quietly, forced the truth upon him, and from the racking visions of his thoughts he turned to her with yearning to hold her closely in his arms. Her face was of childlike loveliness in the glow of the stars. So complete was her fatigue that dark dreams did not mar the solace of her unconsciousness. When the night was half gone, he made a pillow of balsam, and before he fell asleep he drew Toinette's hand to his gently rested his lips against it.

Dawn, another day, then night again. The journey was no longer impossible for Toinette. When she neared exhaustion, camp was made, and when she awoke the march was resumed. Tiaoga called her Sol Yan Makwum, and the warriors regarded her with kindlier eyes. As the days continued and they witnessed her courage, their hearts grew warm toward her, and at times their glances revealed an admiration and friendliness which were never in Tiaoga's.

These days served also as the bridge across which Jeems and Toinette were passing into a future that was all their own, and the poignancy of the loss they had suffered was mellowed by these newer aspects so vital to themselves. The world they had known was a fabric which had crashed in ruin about them—a desolation out of which another existence was building itself. As the deeper solitudes of the wilderness claimed them, this feeling became a bond which nothing could break. Wherever they went and whatever happened, they would belong to each other, for death might separate but it could not destroy.

On the fourteenth day, Tiaoga sent a messenger ahead. That evening he sat on the ground near Toinette, and Jeems translated what he said. "Tomorrow they would reach Hidden Town, and his people would be great rejoicing because they had taken many scalps and had not lost a man. They would honor her—and Jeems, accepting them as flesh of their flesh and bone of their bone. Toinette would live as his daughter. Silver Heels' heart would live in her song. She would be of the forests—forever. That was the word he had sent ahead to Chenusio. Tiaoga was coming with his daughter.

He stalked into darkness and for a time Jeems and Toinette were afraid to speak the thought which was choking at their hearts.

"Your children and your children's children..."

That night Toinette lay staring at the sky with sleepless eyes.

CHAPTER IX

Guarded like a precious jewel on all sides, a hidden town literally as well as in name, Chenusio was one of the greatest of the strange social centers of the Indians to which prisoners with white skins were brought to be adopted by their captors. That such places existed was a fact which had but recently gained credence in both the English and French colonies. Not until 1764 was Colonel Bouquet to free the "white" population in the first of these mystic villages, and then the deliverance which he brought about resulted in less of happiness than of tragedy, for the life and associations which he disrupted in the name and claim of the Colonies had their roots as far back as the third and fourth generations. Hearts and homes were broken as well as prisoners' shackles.

Chenusio was the Rome of a wide domain in that period of its history when Jeems and Toinette came with Tiaoga and his warriors. In it were three hundred people, and at full fighting strength it numbered sixty fighting men. It nestled at the edge of a large meadow which the river embraced in a horseshoe curve and its center was a stockaded stronghold with long-houses, storage buildings, cabins and tepees sufficient for the entire population in times of stress.

The Senecas had vineyards and fine orchards of apples, cherries, and plums, and they also grew tobacco and potatoes on a considerable scale. In the cornfields and growing from the same hills were pumpkins and beans, and everywhere were sunflowers or a dwarfish kind grown for the oil which was extracted from their seeds.

When the season was good, Chenusio lived in comfort during the long winter months. The granaries were full, large quantities of dried fruits were in the storehouses, and underground cellars were stocked with apples, pumpkins, potatoes, and squashes. When the season was bad, Chenusio drew a belt tightly about its stomach for five months of the year. For three of these months it starved.

This was a bad season. Spring frosts had killed the early vegetation and had blackened the buds of apples and plums. The corn was so poor that, after roasting time, only enough was left for the next year's planting, and beans and potatoes had suffered until there was less than a third of a crop. But the people of Chenusio wore no appearance of gloom on the day when Tiaoga and his triumphant warriors were to arrive from the east. Tiaoga's messenger had brought the news that not a man had been lost in their invasion of the territory of their enemies. This was unusual, and it put fresh courage into the hearts of those who had seen the year go against them. Tiaoga's homecoming with the spoils of war was an augury which more than discounted empty cellars and granaries.

As a part of these spoils, they knew Tiaoga was bringing a daughter to take the place of Silver Heels. (To Be Continued)

Not only have you taught every pupil to the best of your ability but also your manner and conduct have so endeared you to us, that we have found it a pleasure to attend and receive instruction.

And now, as a small token of our respect and thankfulness for the many favors and kindnesses shown to us by you, we ask you to accept this small gift, not for its intrinsic value, but as a kindly remembrance from us.

CELEBRATED THEIR WEDDING ANNIVERSARY

MOOSOMIN, Sask., July 8—Rev. J. A. Cairns, M.A., and Mrs. Cairns, of the Poplar Grove district, west of Moosomin, celebrated their golden wedding recently. To mark the happy occasion, the residents of the district tendered them a reception and banquet in the community hall. Following the banquet, congratulatory addresses were delivered by Senator A. B. Gillis, Hon. W. J. Patterson, M.L.A., and a number of clergymen present. Mr. and Mrs. Cairns, nee Alice Waters, were married in Nova Scotia 50 years ago. About 30 years ago they came to Western Canada and took up residence at Poplar Grove, where Mr. Cairns was minister of the Presbyterian appointments for a number of years.

Twenty years ago he retired from active ministry and took up farming, proving one of the most successful farmers in eastern Saskatchewan. Though advanced in years, he still preaches upon occasions. He is an inspiring and powerful speaker, and is one of the most popular members of the United church clergy. The family consists of two sons and two daughters: Mrs. J. B. Dickey, Poplar Grove, Sask.; John Cairns, Nipawin, Sask.; Mrs. Mulligan, of Montreal, and Robert at home. Another son, Thomas, made the supreme sacrifice in the Great War. The popular couple were the recipients of beautiful gifts and congratulations of a wide circle of friends on the occasion of their golden wedding.

(Rev. Mr. Cairns is a native of Freetown, P. E. I., and a cousin of Mr. J. L. Thompson, of Charlottetown.)

I. C. R. & P. E. I. R. Provident Fund Rd. Appointment

MONCTON, July 8—The announcement of the appointment by Hon. Dr. R. J. Manion, Minister of Railways and Canals, of Mr. C. R. MacKenzie, Superintendent of Pensions and Relief C. N. R. system, Montreal, as a member of the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island Railways Provident Fund Board, was received at C. N. R. headquarters here yesterday by Mr. W. U. Appleton, general manager of the Atlantic Region, who is chairman of the Board. Mr. MacKenzie fills the vacancy caused by retirement on pension of Mr. H. H. Melanson, Asst. Traffic Vice-President, who was a member of the Board for 19 years.

The personnel of the Board now comprises Messrs. W. U. Appleton, general manager, chairman; W. E. Barnes, general superintendent of pensions and relief, Montreal representatives appointed by the Minister of Railways and Canals, and Bliss A. Bourgeois, regional treasurer, Moncton, and James H. Black, locomotive engineer, Moncton, elected by the employees.

A bill creating the Intercolonial and Prince Edward Island railway Employees' Provident Fund was adopted by Parliament and assented to March 27th, 1907, and became operative as from the first April following.

The Dean of the Provident Fund Board is Mr. B. A. Bourgeois, regional treasurer, who the record shows has been elected continuously as a representative of the employees since April 1st, 1912, and has thus served for 20 years.

Last Annual Report

A perusal of the 25th annual report of the Provident Fund, recently issued, reveals that in the first year of its existence, 1907-08, the amount of the railways was $62,707.74, with a like sum being donated by the Department of Railways and Canals. Interest amounting to $1,594.36 accrued on this in the year and the number of employees placed on the fund that year was 142, to whom a total of $23,913.04 was distributed in pensions. The amount expended for refunds, salaries, exams, postage, etc., in the year was $2,847.89 and the average monthly pension paid was $25.49. Eleven retired employees died during the period and the balance at the credit of the fund at the end of the year totalled $139,249.21.

In the years that followed, with the exception of 1909-10, amounts contributed from both sources increased, with corresponding rise in the number of employees on pension and in the amounts paid out for same, while the balance at the credit of the fund also mounted. When the fiscal year of 1914-15 was reached contributions from employees passed the $100,000 mark, the amount designated in the Act as the maximum the Department of Railways and Canals would subscribe. From that year on, when the employees paid in $108,631, the contributions from that source steadily climbed until in 1918-19 they reached the sum of $301,610.79 exceeding the following year by approximately $20,000 and then attaining the peak in 1921 when the amount totalled $322,646.40. In the years since then the annual amounts paid by the employees have not exceeded the $300,000 mark and in 1931 stood at $287,275.99.

The department from the years 1914-15 up to the present only contributed the maximum amount under the act, $100,000, but in 1925 when the balance of $206,215.94 shanding at the credit of the fund had been used up, leaving a deficit of $72,251.44, the railways made up the shortage and continued to meet the deficits which have accrued each year since, and in 1931 amounted to $896,783.11.

In the 25 years period disbursements for pensions ascended steadily every year, with the exception of 1921, from $23,913.04 in 1907-08 to $1,018,669.06 in 1931. Each year also witnessed the pension list added to, the largest number granted superannuation being last year when 187 were passed on to the fund. The highest record in previous years was in 1914-15 when 185 took the pension. Mortality among pensioned employees naturally increased as more went on the Fund, deaths rising from 11, in 1907-08, to 76 in 1918-19, which was followed by a recession until 1923 when the number climbed again to 81, showed a drop in the succeeding years until 1928 when the total was 82 and after a lower record in the next two years mounted again last year to equal the 128 record.

The average pension paid to employees during the quarter cent showed a consistent yearly increase from $25.49 in 1907-08, to $64.59 in 1931.
