The induction service will be held in the Church on Friday at 8 o'clock and all the members and adherents of the congregation are requested to attend. Rev. Mr. Boothroyd will preside and induct, Rev. D. M. Grant of Malpeque preach, Rev. Dr. Heartz address the minister and Rev. T. A. Wilson the people. At the close of the service an opportunity will be taken to meet their new minister.

FAREWELL PARTY AT BOUCHARD HOME.—A farewell party was given by Mr. and Mrs. M. Bouchard, and family at their home on Alvarado St., San Pallo, California, on Tuesday evening June 21st for Aeneas McDonald who has been a resident of Richmond for the past two years, and who was employed at the certain-teed Roofing Plant in San Pallo, on the occasion of his returning to his home in Little Rock, Arkansas, on the 23rd of June. It is reported that he will be returning to his father on the farm, but according to veiled information given it seems that Cupid is on the job and has been beckoning him east for some time. It is not known for sure, however, whether he will return to Richmond at a later date, or remain at home. The party proved to be a very enjoyable one, the time being spent in playing whist and dancing. The old square dances, music being furnished by Miss Olive Bouchard at the piano and Hugh Smith with the harmonica. William Frazer of San Pallo was winner of the first prize for gentlemen in the whist game, and John Smith of Richmond winner of the second prize. Mrs. Wm. Frazer of San Pallo was winner of the first prize for ladies, and Miss Lauretta McDonald of Oakland, winner of the second prize. The party was presided over by Donald Campbell of Oakland (formerly of Inverness, Scotland.) A sumptuous late supper was served to the assembled guests, at which time a pair of beautiful gold cuff-buttons were presented to the guest of the evening, Aeneas McDonald. The party broke up in the "wee small hours" with many regrets at the fleetness of time. Those present included, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Fraser and daughter, Anna May, Hugh Smith and son John of Richmond, Dan and Jerome McCormac of Oakland, Ralph McMillan and Donald Campbell of Oakland, Mrs. Jas. Foley and daughter, Mary of Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. Allen J. McDonald, Point Richmond, Mr. and Mrs. George Gasner, San Pallo, Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Lorimer, San Pablo, Mr. and Mrs. Joe Bouchard, Richmond, Mrs. J. Fitzgerald, San Francisco, George Gallant, host and hostess and their immediate family.

JURY DISAGREE IN CASE OF THE KING VS. WILLIAM MUNN

Nine stood for conviction and three for acquittal after charges were delivered yesterday morning—Byers to be sentenced at conclusion of Court.

The case of the King vs. William Munn for receiving stolen goods returned to the jury at 11.45 and the jury returned at 2.20 when the foreman announced that nine stood for conviction and three for acquittal. His Lordship the Chief Justice then discharged the jury. Munn will be re-tried until the next January session of the Supreme Court. He has been released on bail until that time.

Edmund Byers who was recently convicted for breaking and entering the Condensed Milk Factory will not be sentenced until the conclusion of this sitting of the Court.

Following is a brief summary of the charges delivered to the jury yesterday morning. Mr. McNeill in opening stated that this case is different from those others before the court. The prisoner is not charged with theft. The warehouse of N. Rattenbury was broken into and goods stolen. He has not been charged with that. But he has been charged with receiving the goods stolen.

The Crown must show that the things were stolen from the warehouse. They must establish that the goods seized on Munn's premises have been stolen.

The second part of the charge is that the prisoner knew the goods to be stolen. The Crown must prove that the man who was in possession of the goods bore a guilty intent. If there is a doubt in the minds of the jury, a verdict of "not guilty" must be returned, because it is up to the Crown to prove the prisoner guilty.

Let us take the "guilty knowledge" part of the charge first. Suppose you gentlemen were in the prisoner's place. When a man comes to your door and asks you to buy goods, do you ask where he got them? The accused has a large family. He requires a lot of groceries. McDougall comes and brings his goods into the back yard. Mrs. Munn is there. There is nothing unusual about that. She says to buy the goods if they are good. Is it reasonable to think that a man like William Munn, with a large family would jeopardize himself for a few pailry groceries? At that stage the prisoner was not sure of what he was doing. So the only logical thing to do was to draw out a portion of the tea and test it, as was done. The next morning he takes the goods up to the attic. It is significant that the goods were not concealed. He knew that the prohibition officers had made raids before. If he had any doubts, he would have destroyed all evidence of theft. But the boxes were left unconcealed and exposed to view.

Coming to McDougall, he is the important man in the case. There would have been no sense in calling him to the stand last trial. The word of a man who broke into the warehouse of N. Rattenbury & Co. is no good.

Can anything stolen from Rattenbury's warehouse. There was something missing but they didn't say that anything was stolen. Now I want to point out the large number of people who had access to the keys of the premises. They could easily have been made duplicates. Besides do you think that a firm like N. Rattenbury & Co., would delay an order of goods because the second-shipper has gone to dinner?

The Crown must show that these articles in Court have been stolen. There is not any evidence that the butter, sugar and soap have been stolen. The only evidence the Crown have produced that anything has been stolen is the hole in the chest of tea and we are not certain about that.

The files of N. Rattenbury & Co., show that orders have left the warehouse without the signature of the head-shipper. It was only after the seizure that they began to check up the goods, not before. The fact is that these goods have been taken from the warehouse by someone who had a key to the lock of the door.

The Crown have not shown that there was any "guilty knowledge." There is something to my mind that this case does not ring "true." They have not proved that anything has been stolen from Rattenbury's warehouse. They have not proved that there is "guilty knowledge." They have not proved that you do it. The prisoner of this charge. Mr. Donald MacKinnon, prosecuting counsel, first reviewed the evidence of Mr. Whitlock Sr. and other members of the firm. Nobody could get access to that lower warehouse without getting the key from Mr. Rattenbury. Mr. Whitlock had discovered that the goods had been tampered with on the morning of the 20th, Feb. 1926. He had known for a fact that a chest of tea had disappeared. Isn't it a peculiar thing that the very chest of tea had been stolen were found a few days later on the premises of the prisoner? The next point is that did the prisoners have the stolen goods in his possession. That brings up the question of the identity of the goods. The goods found correspond with those missing. The brand of the butter was the same. It was the same kind of soap. Mr. Whitlock is very sure of the identity of the hole in the box of tea. Mr. Whitlock made the hole with a saw and a hammer. You may examine it when you go to your rooms.

Another point is that had the prisoner knowledge that the goods were stolen. In the absence of an explanation of how the goods came into his possession you may find him guilty. But the prisoner gives an explanation. If you believe it you may find him "not guilty." The goods were put up in the attic. Women don't usually do that now days. There is another peculiar feature. The officers found no other goods in the attic. They searched everywhere in the attic for liquor but found no other goods. When they found the goods which are now in Court in an attic amongst a heap of rubbish, their suspicions were aroused and they went for a search warrant. That is the effect it had on them.

With regard to the paint. The fact that the children painted the box may have been true. But there was an attempt to conceal the brand on the boxes. If the state made by the prisoner is no true, there is evidence of "guilty knowledge" and you have a right to return a verdict of "guilty."

ers out of Northumberland Straits. Although the patrol boats were under his supervision, yet he had no jurisdiction over the "Margaret" and should he require that boat in a hurry in an emergency he would be required to wire Ottawa to that effect.

Claude McMillan, hotel-keeper, of the city was next sworn to give evidence. On the 21st of January last, a seizure had been made against him, in which were 15 cases of whiskey.

"Where did you get that," asked Mr. Law. "I don't know where I got it" replied the witness. The Commissioners showed their displeasure at his answers and he was advised to tell the truth.

"Where was it?" "It was in my barn." "Who put it in the barn?" "I helped put it there myself." "Where did you get it?" "I took it from a car."

"Did you find the car standing on the road?" "Yes." "According to his story a man whom he did not know came into his hotel and sold him the liquor. There were two or three different brands. Old Smuggler, Black and White, etc."

"Did this man tell you where he got it?" "No." Commissioner Wright: "You sought it on faith and must know the man."

"What did you pay for it?" "$35, $32 and $28." "Were the bottles of 26 oz size?" "Yes." "That would be a little over $200 a bottle?" "Yes."

Capt. Ed. Dicks, the next witness, was questioned as to the length of Mr. Lindsay's assistant counsel. He testified that he was owner of the Nellie J. Banks, Hurrah, and was interested in the schooner J. D. Hazen and Vivian Ruth.

He told of certain rum running rips of the Nellie. Liquor was procured from Saint Pierre and was transferred to other vessels on the high seas. He was unable to give the names of persons for whom he carried liquor. The men who chartered his vessels did not give their correct names. He had dealt with one American who said his name was MacLean, but he looked like a Jew. "I always did business legitimately on the high seas," said the Captain. The Nellie Banks never did business inside the three mile limit, and she generally lays ten or twelve miles off the coast at different points. He told of one occasion in which he took a cargo of two thousand gallons of rum from a vessel called the "Vivian Ruth," chartered on the occasion. This he disposed of on the high seas.

For one trip of the Nellie Banks he had received $1500. Asked how he disposed of the liquor, he said when he got an order with one corner torn off he knew it was all right. He did not know the vessel that he used to deliver the liquor to. He had met his MacLean in Moncton, and the latter had paid him the $1500 in spot cash. He did not know Tom Nolan. He never met him. He told of liquor being unloaded off Scatterer and Canso. He had owned the Nellie Banks for two years. He had bought Demarara rum and then sold it to his customers on the high seas.

"What did you pay for liquor taken out of Demarara?" "It costs us 48 cents per gallon but it costs about $150 a gallon by the time we get it out of Demarara. Jalous containers cost 50 cents each. "Then you sell it for how much?" "Four dollars a gallon."

Mr. Lindsay, assistant counsel endeavored to ascertain how it was that the customers knew when there was a supply of rum available on the Nellie J. Banks. The Captain replied that he kept in touch with Americans who bought liquor. They come and visit me, he informed the counsel. He denied ever attempting to load liquor on the car at Georgetown. He believed it impossible for any liquor to be loaded there because there are lots of lobster fishermen round there.

"Do you see anybody who are willing to talk?" "They never stop talking." The witness was questioned who was operating the "Hurrah" in carrying potatoes from Poole's wharf to Georgetown and he said a man named Lyatt.

Questioned about his profits, he said he had kept no books. The profits were very small. He had not made enough to fyle an income tax. Four years ago he made a few dollars but the government and lawyers got it all. He never had a bank account.

What was your income last year? "Well, I had enough to live on through the winter. You know I am under heavy expenses, having to pay men high wages, etc."

Witness said the two cargoes sold consisting of 4,000 gallons (worth $16,000) netted him about 50 cents per gallon. Byron Brown next gave evidence regarding a seizure of 75 gallons of rum in a car. He said that he was simply driving the car, that the liquor did not belong to him, but to his brother.

Captain Daniel J. MacDonald of the schooner Minnegan was examined regarding a cargo which came up from Saint Pierre. He went down to St. Pierre in the Minnegan as a passenger. He testified that it was a mixed cargo and disclaimed any knowledge of it.

schooner Minnegan. He said no. He had never seen liquor being taken ashore. He had never told anyone he had seen it. "Have you reason to believe that there was any liquor on that schooner?" he was asked. "Well yes," he replied. "A young fellow who was drunk told me he got his liquor from a schooner." Philip Morrison of Georgetown gave evidence regarding a dory of his which was stolen in the fall of 1926, and three days later he found it tied on the schooner Minnegan. He interviewed the Captain, did not know his name, but as the vessel had no boat he left the dory with him. L. H. Douglas, Station Agent at Georgetown, testified regarding the shipment of four carloads of potatoes from that station, billed to Rhode Island, and which were seized at the border line and found to contain a quantity of liquor. He said the shipper's name was Edward F. Morris. Each car contained 450 bags of potatoes. It was usual to put from 450 to 500 bags in a car. He suspected nothing, and was greatly surprised to know that liquor had been subsequently found in the cars. Liquors were loaded by two men belonging to Georgetown. Mr. Henry Green, formerly of exhibits, takes adjournment until the last of August or early in September. Sittings in Ottawa, and a trip to Washington to consult with United States authorities on the operations of the Anti-smuggling treaty, will complete the activities of the commission prior to completion of a report for the Government and parliament. This will be available for the next session of parliament. The Commissioners left today for their respective homes. Chief Commissioner J. T. Brown is motoring from here through Cape Breton and then to his home in Regina. Commissioner W. H. Wright will travel by motor to Toronto. Commissioner Ernest Roy will go to Quebec by train. Hon. H. W. Rowell, K. C., counsel for the commission returns to his home in Toronto, and R. L. Calder, K. C., his associate, will spend a few days in Nova Scotia and then go back to Montreal. Before adjournment today the Chief Commissioner expressed the thanks of his colleagues and himself for the use of the historic Executive Council Chamber in the provincial building here. It was an "honour and privilege" to sit in the room where Confederation had its birth, he said.

Unceasing efforts of separatists to read into the constitution racial and sectarian guarantees for every province has impeded the task of welding Canada into a united nation, according to Hon. Dr. J. W. Edwards, Toronto, who was elected grand master of the Grand Council at St. John, N. B. last week.
