Planning All-Red Wireless Service

OTTAWA, May 4.—Canada will be materially interested in the plan put forward by the Marconi Wireless Telegraph Company for the construction of a network of wireless communications to serve the needs of the whole British Empire. The company has prepared an elaborate scheme, to be carried out in co-operation, between itself, the British government and the governments of the British Dominions involved. It is stated, however, that so far the proposal has not been brought formally to the attention of the government of Canada. The company would provide trunk and branch routes which would place England in communication by wireless with any part of the Empire, and would enable any part of the Empire to communicate with ships at sea.

Canada would figure in two of the six proposed routes and branches, namely, those from England to Montreal and thence to Vancouver and from Australia to Vancouver. Other routes and branches planned are: England to India and thence to Singapore, Australia and New Zealand, with a branch from Singapore to Hong Kong. England to Egypt and thence to East Africa and South Africa; England to Egypt and thence to India, Singapore, etc. England to West Africa and thence to South Africa, with a branch from West Africa to South America.

OFFERS TO GOVERNMENTS.
The company offers at its own cost to construct, maintain and operate a complete and efficient network of imperial wireless communications. It will pay yearly into the treasury of each government in whose territory one or more stations may be situated, twenty-five per cent of the station's net profits. After thirty years, dating from the inauguration of any service comprised in the network, the stations will become, if so desired, the property of the government or governments concerned, free of payment. The government or governments concerned will have the right to take over the stations at any time by paying for them at the value at which they stand in the company's books plus any sum which may have been expended on the creation of the service, and by paying to the company ten per cent of the gross receipts for the remainder of the period of thirty years dating from the inauguration of the services. The government will have the right to take over the control of the stations during any period of war or national emergency, all arrangements for such control being settled between the fighting services and the company, and to be subject to periodical revision.

It is estimated that the proposed system would comprise approximately thirty main trunk stations, fifty main and one hundred local feeder stations, and two hundred small local stations, with a total staff of about 17,000, including 2,240 engineers, more than 9,000 operators, nearly 1,300 artisans and 2,500 boys. The company is willing to grant every facility for the acquisition of sites, by compulsory purchase, if necessary, and to build, lay and maintain all underground and overhead telegraph and telephone lines required as adjuncts to the wireless system. It desires as assurance that the stations will not be diverted from the duties for which they were constructed, except in a national emergency. It wishes to reserve the right to extend the system to foreign countries on commercially advantageous terms, with the understanding that imperial traffic shall invariably have preference over foreign traffic. It also asks the government or governments concerned to secure the allocation of suitable international wave lengths to the stations in the system, and to see that other companies are not allowed to use scientific apparatus or secure wave lengths which would interfere with the working of the "All Red" network. The chief requests of the company are, thus for a thirty year license, for power to acquire sites for station by expropriation, if necessary, and for the right to extend its service to foreign countries. It is willing, on similar terms, to construct also stations for communication with ships at sea and aircraft in flight, and to link up those stations with the imperial system.

TIN-WHISTLE PHILOSOPHY
To say that Barbara Charming was indignant is to put it mildly. "I shall never speak to Elsie Anderson again!" she spluttered. "What's the matter now, child?" asked her mother gently. "She cut me when she passed me on the street this morning," the girl replied. "Perhaps she didn't mean to, and, if she did, I shouldn't let that cloud my happiness, dear. I heard a story about Abraham Lincoln who was always been a great help to me. One day he was walking with a friend in a park in Washington when a man coming toward them refused to turn out, and Lincoln quietly stepped aside and let the man pass. 'Why did you do that?' asked Lincoln's friend. 'He should have turned out for you.' 'Why,' replied Lincoln, 'if I hadn't turned out of the way there might have been a collision!' He had enough height of manhood and enough girth of soul to afford to give way. Christ never worried about deference. Without loss of conscious dignity He could wash His disciples' feet. Great souls are always simple souls. It is the people whose dignity needs defence who are quick to take offence. 'Yes, but one can't help feeling hurt' when people snub you, can you?"

"Oh, yes, you can. It's all a question of your point of view. The trouble with most of us is that our souls swing in such a small circle. I was going downstreet the other day, when I passed Mr. North's house there was little Robert crying so, that you could hear him a block away. I asked him what was the trouble and he told me he had lost his tin whistle. That penny whistle filled his horizon. He had loving parents, and health to run about in the sunshine. But all that counted for nothing compared with his penny whistle. What he needed was a little more horizon. And I came away thinking how often God must smile at us when we get excited over trifles and allow some petty thing to blot out the sky. It's our spiritual immaturity that so often makes us unhappy. 'I think you're right again, mother,' said the girl soberly.

TELEGRAPHERS' TALES
A single telegraphist was working a lonely station in the Sudan. Finding the solitude getting on his nerves, he tried to think of some scheme for getting a show. At last, in desperation, he wired to headquarters, "Please send relief at once, AAA Station surrounded by lions, wolves, and tigers." Back came the unfeeling reply, "Reference your report AAA. No wolves in the Sudan." Nothing daunted, the telegraphist answered, "Reference my previous report AAA. Please cancel wolves."

Some telegraphists attain a much greater speed in operating than others, and sometimes fail to allow for the slower working of their weaker brethren. One such man, at a station in the wild and woolly West of U.S.A., had a reputation for being a "flyer". He had an exceptionally long message of three thousand words to transmit to a small station situated about thirty miles away. The operator at the other station was a novice, and a bad "reader" into the bargain. The "flyer" just shored his switch across and began to send at a terrific speed, without giving any pauses to see how the receiving operator was progressing.

Just as he reached the two thousand nine hundred and ninety-ninth word, a dishevelled figure drew up outside the station, flung himself off his sweating horse, dashed into the instrument-room, and presented his revolver at the telegraphist's head shouting: "If you don't go back to the beginning, you blighter, I'll blow your brains out!" It was the telegraphist from the other station!

A DIFFERENT THING
A country minister tells a funny story of an incident that happened in his church the other day. During the sermon a baby began to cry, and its mother immediately picked it up, and began to carry it toward the door. "Stop!" the minister exclaimed. "Don't go away; the baby is not disturbing me." The mother continued her way to the door with the very audible remark: "Oh, 'e ain't, ain't 'e? But you're a disturbin' of 'im!"
