The Woman Who Loved and Earned

BY JANE PHELPS A Modern Story of Home and Business

RESENTMENT CHAPTER 80.

I tried to reply to Marion Hovey's tirade, but I was almost stupefied at the charges she had hurled at me. Then her confession that she loved him—she had almost said she had hoped he would marry her—had almost taken my breath. To think that such a little nobody, a girl whose sole accomplishment was that she knew how to cook and keep house, should tell me, a successful business woman, that she loved her husband, and that I had been his ruin.

"If you have finished, Miss Hovey, I will go," I finally said, rising. "Finished? Why, I could go on talking for hours. Robert was always so glib, so gentlemanly. He isn't any more. He is like a person who has had all the life crushed out of him. Like a disappointed old man. All I wish is that he had spunk enough left to go away—to leave you!"

"And marry you," I returned angrily. "I did not say that! But even that would be better than the way he is doing. At least I think I could keep him from pool rooms and from drinking. I would at least give him a home, and try to make him happy."

"If you lived on what he earned, you wouldn't have much of a simple but home-like room. It is easy to talk."

"Robert would soon earn more had he any incentive—that is, he would unless the incentive came too late."

She advanced a short step nearer me, her features held tight, her hands clenched. Then she went on: "I wouldn't be in your place for anything in the world. Mrs. Meredith. Oh you may be clever, you may sell more hats than any other saleswoman in that smart shop where you spend your time. But I would rather die than be unwearable for the ruin of a man's life—especially if he was the man I loved."

"You are insulting! If you have quite finished, I will go. And don't think that Robert will not know of the way I have been insulted."

"I was furious. She had not only declared she was in love with my husband, but had accused me, of ruining him—insulted me in every thing she said."

"I expect you would be the kind who would tell," she replied in a tired voice. Then she let me find my way to the door alone. I left her standing in the corner of the room, a queer look on her face, half-wistful, half-regretful. Or so it seemed to me.

"It would serve her right if Robert never spoke to her again! He must not go there any more! I won't have it!" I hurried along the street, talking so loudly to myself that a woman stopped and looked after me.

Dane; was over at the boarding house, but I did not care. I should have choked had I tried to eat. I paced back and forth like a crazy woman, for a time, muttering to myself, angry, distressed.

I longed for Robert to come home so I could tell him how his friend had treated his wife. It had not light, but sat at the window in the dark after a time, exhausted with my emotion.

"Come a thought: Could Marion Hovey have by any possibility have been right? Was I in any way to blame for Robert's deterioration? I had tried always to do my best; never had I been selfish with him, either as regarded my opinions, or my earnings. Would he have been happier had we lived in a cheap place, and I given up my position?"

I tried to convince myself he would not; that we couldn't possibly have lived without my salary. But down in my heart at last I felt that perhaps if I had tried to make a home when we were first married, when he had a good position and was drawing a fair salary, he might have taken care of me as well as Frank Weed and Carson Murphy had of Jane and Betty.

"It's too late now to think of that," I said aloud just as I heard the door open, and Robert came in. "What are you sitting in the dark for?" he asked.

"I was thinking," I said. "You had better go to bed and do your thinking in the morning."

NERVOUS, THIN, AILING WOMEN

Vinol Will Enrich Your Blood, Banish Nervousness, Make You Strong and Well

Physicians Recommend Vinol and Druggists Guarantee It

Pale, nervous, ailing women always tired, and often fussy, make homes unattractive and unhappy. You can readily change that tired, dragged-out, listless feeling to one of buoyant health by building up your blood, nerve and muscle tissue with VINOL.

It makes red corpuscles and enriches the blood, quickens the circulation, creates a hearty appetite, promotes sound sleep, strengthens the nerves and imparts renewed energy and vim to every organ in the body. The stony, quickens, the eyes brighten and a clear, healthy complexion replaces that pale, sallow color.

If such women could only realize the change that VINOL will make in their appearance, by restoring strength and health, they would not rest until they started its use. For all run-down, nervous, anemic conditions, weak women, overworked men, feeble old people and delicate children, there is no remedy like VINOL. Your druggist will return your money if Vinol fails to benefit you.

HINTS FOR The Motorist

BY ALBERT L. CLOUGH

INSTALLING MASTER-VIBRATOR

L. C. P. writes: I have been advised that by installing a master-vibrator on my Ford the engine would run better, but another party has told me that the master-vibrator would give trouble after a while. What do you think as to this?

Answer: With the master-vibrator, the cylinders may be expected to fire more nearly uniformly than when separate vibrators are used and this conduces to smoother and more powerful engine operation. However, this single vibrator does all the work and may require more frequent attention than any one of the individual coil vibrators. You can arrange to use either system at will, keeping the coil vibrators screwed down tight, when you are running on the master-vibrator and short-circuiting the master-vibrator and readjusting the coil vibrators, if you need to go back to the old system.

POSSIBLE INJURY TO GENERATOR

L. La R. writes: When laying up my car for the winter, I was told that the only thing necessary to be done to the electrical system was to remove the battery and put it in a suitable place, but I find by reading the instruction plate on the generator that its terminal should be grounded, whenever the battery is disconnected. Please tell me if I have injured the generator or anything else by not following this latter instruction?

Answer: Certainly not, if the engine has not been run since the battery was disconnected. The caution means that the generator should not be run unless the battery is connected to it and unless you have

FEVERS AND OTHER PROSTRATING DISEASES THAT EXHAUST THE BLOOD

There is often that extreme tired feeling, loss of appetite, tendency to anemia, nerve exhaustion, in active bowels, constipation and great danger of still further prostration and serious illness. Hood's Sarsaparilla first works upon the blood. It is remarkable how promptly its purifying, vitalizing effects are noticed. It "makes food taste good," promotes assimilation so as to help secure the greatest nourishment possible, promoter digestion. Nerve strength and cheery health inevitably follow, further danger is averted, and the glad-to-be-alive feeling again prevails. To read this is well, to realize it yourself is better.

Get Hood's Sarsaparilla today, and for a cathartic, nothing better than Hood's Pills, in small doses a gentle laxative; larger, an active cathartic.

BATTERY CHARGING OUTFIT

V. H. C. writes: I have electric lights in my garage and should like to know what equipment is required to enable me to charge my storage battery here.

Answer: We presume that you have alternating current and if so you require some form of rectifier to convert this into direct current and to reduce the voltage to the 8 or 16 volts which your battery requires, dependent upon whether it is one of the three or six-cell. The rectifier is a handy, portable, and almost automatic device, reasonable in price and conveniently connected to a large socket and to the battery. It is charged and you can do the charging at night when your car is in use. Your local electric light company can doubtless supply you with any one of several forms of rectifier.

ASKS ABOUT CHARGING RATE: J. V. asks: How much charging current is the ammeter supposed to register of a 1917 car, when it is running at a medium speed?

Answer: The general rule is that at a speed of 12 to 15 miles per hour, the charging current should be at least equal to the full-lamp load. You can determine the number of amperes taken when all lamps are burning when the engine is stopped and adjust the charging rate to equal this amount as shown by the ammeter indication when no lamps are on. The instruction book for this model does not state the charging rate and in fact says that a charging indicator and not an ammeter is used.

Seeing some tacks lying about the pulpit, he said:—"You should not leave the tacks there, Katie. Now what would happen if I stepped on one in the middle of the sermon next Sunday?" "Oh, well," said Katie, "there would be one point you wouldn't linger on long, any way."
