THE HANDSOME MAN

"Yes?"
"Jolly good sort, if you ask me."
"I didn't."
"WHAT? Oh, yes quite so," Sir George smiled. She was a pretty thing this red-headed girl, even if she was a trifle brusque. "Well, then I volunteer the remark."

He waited, but Roberta did nothing but blow smoke rinks. The middle-aged might be a puzzle to her but she flattered herself that she knew her own generation. This young man had come out to make himself agreeable. Well, he would be left to do it all by himself.

But she had mistaken her young man. He looked off over the river and then back at her. "Got something rather awkward to say to you," he advised. "Fact is there's a young man on the mainland trying to attract your attention for some twenty minutes."

"Where is he?" Roberta asked, her face stiff and maslike. To her utter chagrin she felt it stiffen. It must be Jack. Why did he make a fool of himself by coming here and not coming to the house openly?

"Over beyond the bridge on the road. He has left his car—rather a spiffy car. He's down on the tow-path now."

"Quite a watchdog," observed Roberta scornfully but she swung to her feet and went to the doorway and looked out. Yes it was Jack. What was he doing here? She had written him that she could not meet him until next Monday.

"Want to send him a message? It can be done."

"No," said Roberta, feeling instantly that he thought she was afraid her father might see her and ask questions. "I can manage my own affairs thanks."

"Absolutely," agreed Sir George and moved away.

To her astonishment he went through the doorway and toward the house. Roberta was so amazed that she could not make even the faintest move to stop him. She was annoyed. She was quite unused to such treatment. Here was she, the only girl he knew, apparently, this side of the Atlantic, any way the only girl he knew in this place. Well, he would keep his mouth shut, or go to blazes for all of her. Well, he would keep his mouth shut.

Slowly and painfully, leaning heavily on the strong young arm that supported him, Robert MacBeth made his way along the terrace. When they reached his chaise longue again, he relaxed gratefully as the younger man helped him to a comfortable position, and arranged his pillows.

There was a short silence. Sir George lit a cigarette and leaned against the wicker chair he intended to slide into in a moment. He could not see the girl now, and the car had disappeared.

Robert MacBeth had taken up a letter he had laid down just before his promenade. He handed it to his secretary.

"What do you think of that?"
It was a typewritten letter addressed to "Robt MacBeth," and said:
"Dear Sir: Do you know the man your daughter is meeting at different resorts on the Lincoln h'gh-way? Many facts in your life are known to the writer of this, which you would not like to find public property. If you want to know all

SHE FOUND THE WAY

REGULARLY—once a month—many a girl decides to do something about it. Surely there must be something to help such pain, such weakness... some way to get relief.

Then the period passes. She forgets. But next month she suffers again. Now—today—is the time to do something. Buy a bottle of this Vegetable Compound. Keep it ready. It has been a godsend to thousands. 98 out of 100 women who try it report benefit.

Through its tonic action it built them up and relieved the pain. They depend on it. You can depend on it too.

thought. He was not a boy, he was a man. Jack stood his ground near a tall sycamore and a thicket of sumac which screened him. He beckoned to her eagerly. Why couldn't he meet her in the open?

Roberta MacBeth was frowning when Sir George joined him. He looked up quickly as the younger man came toward him.

"Wouldn't you like to try a bit of exercise?" Sir George asked. "Suppose you take my arm."

"Maybe I'd better," MacBeth agreed reluctantly, "though I'm dashed unwilling to stir. Well, once around, if you're bent for exercise."

"Once around it is," Sir George told him encouragingly. "We'll have you dancing in no time."

It would give the girl a chance, Sir George thought to himself, his eyes seeking the path to the bridge. Yes, there she went. It might be that the wisest course would be to warn the father, but he could not bring himself to do it. The girl was plucky. She had not asked him to keep quiet or anything of that kind. He could either keep his mouth shut, or go to blazes for all of her. Well, he would keep his mouth shut.

Slowly and painfully, leaning heavily on the strong young arm that supported him, Robert MacBeth made his way along the terrace. When they reached his chaise longue again, he relaxed gratefully as the younger man helped him to a comfortable position, and arranged his pillows.

Farm Notes

OUR MOST POISONOUS MUSHROOMS
(Experimental Farms Note)

"How can you tell a mushroom from a toadstool?" This is the usual question asked when mushrooms are discussed. "Toadstool" is the common name for a poisonous mushroom and does not apply to a special class of fungi that are poisonous. It is impossible to make a set of rules that will divide all the "toadstools" from all the mushrooms. It is easy, however, to distinguish the group of fungi to which our most poisonous mushrooms belong.

This poisonous group has white spores. The colour is determined by placing the cap of the mushroom with the gills downward—one half on a piece of black paper and the other half on a piece of white paper examining the colour of the powdery deposit after several hours. The second character is the death cup or volva at the base of the stem. This death cup is the lower half of the cover that surrounded the young "toadstool" and still encloses the base of the stem or appears as fragments on the swollen bulb. The third character is the ring or veil on the stem. The common edible mushroom which has dark purple spores has a ring too but in the poisonous group it is usually much larger and hangs limply.

The death Angel is the worst of our poisonous mushrooms, as it has been estimated that 90 per cent of all deaths from mushroom poisoning are caused by this one species. It is a large, tall mushroom, usually snowy white, although sometimes faintly brown or greenish. The death cup is like a small sack surrounding the base of the stem and partly buried in the soil. The ring is attached to the upper half of the stem and is quite thin and easily torn. This species is very common during late summer when there has been abundant rainfall.

The Fly Agaric is another deadly poisonous mushroom. It is a large handsome fungus, yellow or orange with a touch of red, the top usually being covered with a yellow or whitish scales. The stem is yellowish with a swollen base. The death cup is not marked plainly but can be recognized by the fragments on the swollen base of the stem. It is very common and grows in open woods, under bushes and in fence corners during the summer and fall.

The easiest way to learn to recognize these two poisonous mushrooms is from pictures. These two

It was unsigned, merely the number of the post office box, 0111 in a small Pennsylvania city, being given.

Sir George handed it back. "I'd throw it in the fire."

Robert MacBeth grasped the letter firmly. "That's where you would be wrong. Such letters should be kept and used to trap the writer or writers. I'll send it to a detective agency. I don't scandal I'm afraid of. I've never done anything to be blackmailed for and neither has Roberta."

"Then why should you bother?" MacBeth turned an honestly worried face to the younger man. "I'm pretty sure that the writer of this letter has some connection with the difficulty I've been having with my payroll, but I can't convince the police."

Spring Changes To Geyser
Emerald Pool at Noor's Junction in Yellowstone Park, once a beautiful quiet spring of vivid green that gave it its name, is now promising to become a glamorous and exciting show as a geyser, says the National Park Service. "For fully a week, since its first eruption of the season on July 1, Emerald has been playing with almost consistent regularity every half hour," the writer asserts. "This pool that decided to grow up and join the host of famous geysers is of the fountain type, with a large body of water, probably twelve to fifteen feet in diameter. Between eruptions it subsides into a perfectly quiet pool again, and during its quiescent period a steam vent about twenty yards away begins to send up a violent whistle."

"The newly formed steam vent, now seen as an indicator for the steam spouting until the vent of the Emerald fills up again with water after the drainage due to the eruption. Then the whistle pipes down and shortly the boiling and bubbling begin in the Emerald and another eruption is in the offing.

"Because of the large body of water in this pool the eruptions do not reach extensive height, the major spouts being about twenty feet high, but occasional bursts go as high as thirty or forty feet. Close observation for a full week by the ranger naturalist in charge has shown the new geyser adhering very faithfully to its self-assumed schedule.

"The once beautiful emerald-green water, now churned and tossed by frequent eruptions, is a greyish green, somewhat muddy in appearance."

An old farmer was complaining bitterly to the minister of the terrible bad weather for the crops when the latter reminded him that he had much to be grateful for all the same. "And remember," said the good man, "Providence care for all. Even the birds of the air are fed each day." "Aye," replied the farmer, darkly, "Off my corn."—Tit-Bits.
