THE STORY OF A WOMAN'S TRANSFORMATION

By Marion Rubincam

FRANCIS HELPS
Chapter 89

The pity I felt for Eshter when I first met her at the station only increased as the days went by. She had let go.

And letting go is the most pitiful thing that could happen to any man or woman. There must be a striving for something—as long as that exists, there is some hope. But as soon as one gives up—lets go—then life is hopeless. For I am firmly convinced that our fate is in our own hands. No one can work our destiny for us—no one wants to.

It came out in all sorts of unexpected ways.

Driving from the station in the taxi, we passed through the theatre and the shopping centre every sign brilliantly lit on this winter afternoon. The shop windows held gowns of every lovely color set like gems in a glow of golden lights. Motors slid quietly by us, hundreds at a time, and people crowding home from work swarmed over every inch of pavement The dancing flashing moving signs above Broadway made a midday of artificial brilliancy.

"Look there," I told her pointing to some particularly bright sign.

"Uh huh," she answered, glancing from the taxi window. "Takes a lot of lights to do that, doesn't it? Did I write that Anne Lee has a baby? We never thought.—

"Look there—on the left, Esther," I insisted. "That shop with the dress made of silver spangles My land do they wear such things? Looks like a circus," was all the enthusiasm I got "By the way, Laura's gettin' a new dress, blue mesaline. Charlie bought some in——"

And so it went. Esther's whole interest was in pouring out at once the local gossip—the petty details that I never cared about, but that made up the sum of our existance in Henly Falls.

"Ill show you the city, or some of it after Christmas,' I said.

"Uh huh," she agreed indifferently "Such a lot of people. They make me dizzy."

Don't you love the crowds—and the life—and excitement—and the noise and hurry——?"

"Good Lord, Enid," Esther said "Doy you expect me to carry on like a school kid? I dunno. I'd like so many people about. Does that thing mean we have to pay that much money?"

She loked at the taxi meter which had passed the dollar mark I nodded and explained the taxi meter system—and quietened her when she objected to the cost.

"The cars are too crowded at this hour to carry many packages on them. We never use cabs—but this is an ocasion.

That mollified and pleased her and when we reached our tiny apartment she showed more interest in things.

"Awful small," was her first comment, after she had kissed Violet.

"That's one thing we like mother," the girl said quickly. "I'm working Mother, but I managed to get home early tonight to start dinner."

On the whole, we had a pleasant evening. Violet was home before six, so I judged that she had come directly and had not stopped off for tea with Bud this evening.

Esther sitting in state in the living room armchair, her feet "resting" in red carpet slippers ran out her roll of gissip—everything that happened in Henly Fal's since the day we left.

"How is James?" Vi asked, busy arranging the table.

"James? Oh, he's same's ever. Poor James I guess he's never be anything. Don't seem to take no interest in things, hates farm work and does as little as he can.

"Does he still like machinery?"

There was a little note in Violet's voice that Esther did not hear.

"I spose. I dunno," she answered placidly 'Hasn't touched any or tried what he calls experiments any more—not since that row last summer. I guess your father cured him good, as he said.

"I imagine he did." Vi answered, her blue eyes angry as she spoke. But Esther was leaning back comfortably, and never knew the criticism of herself and Jim that the girl's voice and eyes betrayed.

Helen came running up for a moment to greet Esther, and whispered something to Violet. The girl slipped out of the room. I knew it must be a telephone call, and since so much secrecy was made of it, I knew, too, that it must be from Bud.

Esther, of course, must know of this affair between Violet and Bud. I though perhaps when she was with us a few days, when she had time to change her point of view a little, that I would tell her. At least, I would tell her that Violet was still in love and that I thought eventually they would marry.

But first we must make sure that Bud was out of his present difficulty. Neither Esther nor Jim would ever forgive even the suggestion of dishonesty.

Violet came in, her eyes troubled her mouth with that little trembling expression at the corners that made her so appealing to look at. She followed me back to the kichen to whisper to me.

"They've gotten some new evidence, and there's an investigation on tonight and the day after tomorrow, and Bud has to be at court then. Bud says if only Mr. Meade were back in town, he wouldn't mind. But he had a letter from him saying he would be back in time to help.

MRS. L.J. LOVELACE SAYS IT CHANGED HER WHOLE LIFE

People who have suffered until they have become discouraged and out of heart should profit by the experience of Mrs. Lydia J. Lovelace, Market Street, Liverpool, Nova Scotia.

"I had rheumatism all my life," she said, "and have spent hundreds of dollars with very little results until I began taking Tanlac. When I began taking the medicine every joint in my body ached and my fingers were so swollen and painful I could not even wring out a dish cloth. My arms were swollen all up in great knots and my feet were so swollen I could not get my shoes on. Even my shoulders and the back of my head pained me and I could not get any ease or rest in bed. I simply had to give up trying to do my housework.

"My whole system was run down and I felt discouraged and depressed, because I saw little chance of ever being any better. I felt such good results from my first bottle of Tanlac that I kept buying bottle after bottle until I have now taken twelve. My rheumatism is gone and my whole life is changed. I eat good, get plenty of good sound sleep and enjoy living. I have told lots of people what Tanlac has done for me and will always praise it."

Tanlac is sold by all good druggists.

$1,000,000 In Gold Shipped To Canada

(Special to The Guardian.)

NEW YORK, Nov. 18.—The New York Trust Company today shipped one million dollars in gold coin to Canada.

This is the fourth shipment of the kind made by this company since the 14th of September. The movement of gold to Canada has assumed considerable importance lately because of the favorable position of the Canadian dollar in the New York money market. The dollar was quoted today at 1-8th of one per cent. premium.

WOMAN THE BRAINS OF RUM SMUGGLERS?

NAHANT, Mass., Nov. 17.— A band of rum runners led by a woman, have landed a quarter of a million dollars worth of Canadian liquor in Nahant in the last three months.

Last week more than $50,000 worth of the highest grade liquor was landed and successfully disposed of.

The liquor was unloaded from vessels almost within the shadow of the home of Henry Cabot Lodge.

Woman in Deal.

Revenue agents yesterday were searching for the woman leader of this band. The operations of this band are said to be the most gigantic and successful effort ever made to evade the U.S. prohibition law.

A touch of the romantic is added to the colorful tale of the rum running by the woman leader. She is the widow of a Lynn sporting man, good looking well dressed, and a person of refinement and poise.

She possesses an expensive auto mobile which, however, she is careful never to use in rum running She takes monthly trips to Montreal and St. John, where she arranges for the purchase and shipment of the liquor which is eventually landed along the rocky shores of Nahant.

Off Rocky Shores.

This woman is the brains of the band. She is said to be daring and resourceful and it is due to her leadership the band has so far been successful in eluding the almost frantic revenue officers.

In addition the officers are looking for two Salem men, one Lynn man, two Boston men and one Nahant man, who are said to be mixed up in the operations. While authorities are almost sure of the identification of these persons they have so far been unable to get enough evidence to warrant arrests. The liquor is pedled by a gang of 40 or more, the police have learned.

Unload in Dories.

The peninsula of Nahant is an ideal place for the operations of the gang. This rocky, irregular strip of land juts into the Atlantic for several miles. Its coast line is deeply indented and there are numerous small bays and inlets which can be used by the rum runners as a base of operations

It is said that news of the arrival of one of the liquor laden ships is dashed by wireless to the members of the band in this vicinity and they prepare for the coming of the vessel. The ship anchors off shore three miles or more, and in the darkness small dories and motor boats put out from one of the rocky inlets to its side. Then the liquor is transferred and landed.

Guard Road.

While Nahant is ideally situated for the purpose of landing the liquor, it has its drawbacks, inasmuch as it is joined to the mainland by a narrow causeway. There is only one road connecting Nahant and Lynn.

Along this road the liquor must be transported by truck, and officers have decided to stop all vehicles proceeding toward Lynn.

It is said there are more than 40 salesmen of the gang whose sole duty is to peddle the stuff to regular customers after it finally reaches the mainland. Many of these customers are said to be prominent and wealthy North Shore residents who welcome

TOO MANY ORNAMENTS

The newest enterprise of the women's institute is a campaign against the overcrowding of rooms, particularly living-rooms, of small houses with useless ornaments. This has long been a cause of complaint by country doctors and hygenic experts. In country cottages, mantels, over-mantels, corner cupboards, side tables, and old-fashioned whatnots loaded with all sorts of articles, are comomnly seen. A visitor to a small Norfolk cottage last summer was astonished to find five clocks, three of the mgrandfather clocks, in the parlor. Labor-saving and hygenic are the aims of the present campaign which has started in Dorset following a conference of women at Wimborne, where it was stated that a visitor to a cottage counted 250 articles, mostly ornamentals, in one small room.

AUTOMATIC STOKERS ON BOARD SHIP

It is a curious fact that, while machinery has been very generally adopted in boiler mouse on land theb oiler rooms on board ship are stil generally given over to hand operation. Those who have some knowledge of the stoker's life below decks will wonder that the demand for machinery in place of human flesh was not heard insistently many years ago. The oil-firing of boilers, which has been very vigorously developed for a long time by British engineering firms, effects a vast improvement on conditions; but there remain for a long time many vessels with coal-fed boilers4 Where the boiler is of the water-tube type it is possible to find room for machinery to feed the coal into the furnace and to remove the askes and clinkers. A recent installation put in a vessel of twelve hundred tons by a British firm proves that there are no insuperable obstacles to the application of automatic stoking on board ship. With this type of stoker the rolling of the vessel does not introdue any material trouble, but in any event the furnace may in emergency be fired by hand, so that there is no dainger of steamraising being interrupted by any eccentricity on the part of the machine under exceptionally arduous conditions.

EIGHTEENTH CENTURY ..... WOMEN SMOKERS

Complaints of heavy smoking among women are by no means new. In a "Statistical Account of Scotland," published in 1791, a writer lamented the prevalence of smoking among the working women of that time, which, he said, was more excessive than among the men. "There is scarce a young woman who by the time she has been taught to spin, but has also learnt to smoke."

HOTEL HAIRPINS NOW LOCKED UP

A woman, gowned and hatted in the latest mode, wearing jewelry worth thousands of dollars, and giving every appearance of breeding and social position, stepped up to the desk of the Hotel Astor room clerk and asked for some hotel stationery.

Are you a guest of the hotel, Madame?" asked the clerk.

There was a mere flicker of hesitation in her eyes before she replied, "Why, yes, of course."

The clerk handed out one sheet of Hotel Astor paper and one Hotel Astor envelope. As she took them and walked away rather hurriedly, as one who has come safely through a rather hazardous adventure, the clerk grinned sardonically and remarked to the Kansas City man who was signing the register for his regular monthly visit:

She saved a dime that time, but I'm betting she won't do it again. She came near coming a cropper Hereafter she'll pay a dime to the maid in the ladies' room and get what she wants without having the feeling of a first offender in court."

"Wasn't she staying here?" inquired the Kansas City man.

If she had been she would have gone to the mail clerk for that stationery," replied the clerk. "If that were not enough her moment of hesitation when I asked her if she was a guest was sufficient to clinch it. Moreover, it is part of our business to know faces and I have never seen her face before. We don't see many of her kind these days. They stopped coming around when we shut off free access to hairpins, face powder, rouge, lipsticks, manicure tools, towels and stationery."

"What did you do," pursued the Kansas City man, "run a free beauty parlor?"

VISITORS RAIDED POWDER BOXES

"That was about the size of it," answered the clerk. "The ladies' room used to be equipped with all those accessories. All they had to do was to walk in and help themselves. There was a maid in attendance, but she was a 283456 tendance, but she was asked no questions, and whether or not she got tips depended on the mood of the user of the complexion restorers.

"Keeping that room supplied with these articles cost a pretty penny. A woman would go in with her own powder box empty, stick a piece of cotton into the hotel powder box and shake it into her own. She would continue this until her own receptacle was filled. Another would stick a dozen hairpins in her hair when she needed only one. Many a bathroom displays towels that came from our ladies' room. Lipsticks and rouge boxes disappeared so rapidly that we would have thought the maid was in league with a "fence," if we hadn't assured ourselves that she wasn't. Combs and nail files went the ame way. We coldn't very well chain these things down as we do the brushes and combs

Prohibition Hurts Champagne Industry

(Special to The Guardian.)

LONDON, Nov. 18.—Latest advices from Paris are that Hon. W. S. Fielding and Hon. Ernest Lapointe will be delayed there much longer than they expected by the negotiations for the new Franco-Canadian trade convention.

The French Government has taken a strong position on the subject of Canadian prohibition and its effect upon the champagne industry, which is said to be almost ruined this year, largely to the cutting off the United States, Canadian, Norwegian and other markets. Other concessions proposed by the Canadians, however, will probably meet the situation.

SHORT HAIRED WOMTN

Russia has become a nation of short haired women. This to the newcomer is supposed to be a symptom of Communist leanings, in a country where the men formerly advertised their faith in the Soviet brand of politics by wearing long hair, heavy beards, leather coats, and top boots. As a atter of fact, the majority of short-haired women are not Communists at all. They are said to have earned their short hair by surviving the typhus. Those who contract it, men or women, have their heads shaved.

..... THE TALL SOLDIER .....

Bordelais—My dear sir, here in our barracks we have the tallest soldier ever seen. Marseillais—The tallest? How tall is he? Bordelais—Six feet nine inches. Marseillais—Six feet, nine inches? That is nothing. In our barracks we have a sergeant who is so tall that he is compelled to kneel when he wants to scratch his ead! Lippincott's.

No great characters are formed in this world without suffering and self denial.—Matthew Henry.

STRAWBERRY TREES

Some amusing stories of London school-children are told by Mr. Pett Ridge, the author. Children, he says, are much given to exaggerate, especially where there is no risk of evidence to the contrary being produced. He recalls seeing one child met by its mother on returning from a country holiday. The little one at once began to talk about country experiences and described picking strawberries for breakfast. The mother replied "Yes and I wonder you didn't fall out of the tree and break yaur neck."

THE ROTASCOPE

The National Physical Laboratory, which was established near London by the British Government has produced quite a number of scientific instruments of the highest value. One of these was recently shown at a scientific exhibition in London. Its purpose is to render a rotating object continuously visible while it appears to be at rest. The method adopted is different from that of illuminating the object by a series of brief flashes of light. The principle made use of is a property of reflection from a smooth surface which is rotated round an axis parallel to the surface and in line with the axis of the object. When this reflecting surface is rotated at half the speed of the object itself the image in the reflecting surface appears stationary. This instrument is expected to prove useful for measuring speed and for studying the phenomena of vibration and strain in rotating objects.
